6 common marriage mistakes

6 common marriage mistakes by Tapan Sarkar

Every marriage starts with a lot of hope and dream about life long association filled with love and togetherness. But very few marriages fulfill the hopes of the participants in totality.

There are various reasons for this but here we single out 6 of those. Every young person who is planning marriage should be aware of these most common pitfalls.

1. Marrying for the sake of love without first checking the depth of love.

No denying that all relationships start with a sense of love and mutual liking. Committing to a long term relationship like marriage solely on the basis of that feeling of love is a mistake. Because most of the time this kind of feeling is superficial and can not pass the test of time. Romantic feeling dies as time passes and far more important issues like 'family background', 'values', 'religious faith', 'financial stability' raise their head, and these issues are of real importance which almost every body with feeling of mutual love ignore.

2. Marrying someone who does not share an interest or hobby.

While marriage with a person who does not share an interest or hobby does not itself make the marriage unstable, presence of such an interest or hobby can make life more enjoyable for both the partners. And this can make a real difference so while selecting life partner this aspect must be taken into account.

But for some reason or other this aspect is often overlooked before marriage. And efforts start after marriage to adapt the partner to one's own interest or develop a new common interest. While that is not an impossible task, the process of adapting may become unpalatable and may lead to unstable marriage.

3. Not knowing what questions to ask for checking compatibility.

As discussed earlier that marriage decision based on initial sense of love may be counter productive. To make a marriage successful one should do some simple homework. Knowledge of future partner's background and certain other things can play a crucial role here. But many young persons either do not try to know all these important facts or do not know what are important aspects s/he must know to make their marriage successful.

4. Thinking proper and careful quarries may offend her/him.

One may think that too much investigation about future partner's back ground may not be a good idea. As the other partner may find it distasteful. This kind of thought process keeps many young man and woman from asking the right questions before marriage.

5. Depending too much on a friend or relatives recommendation.

A sizable number of young man and woman often get married on the recommendation of relatives or friends. While generally relatives and friends are regarded as well wishers, marrying on their recommendation is not a good idea. As their knowledge of a person can never equal to the knowledge the person has about herself or himself. So the person to be married is in a much better position to select compatible life partner. Best way out is acting on their recommendation only after successful completion of compatibility check.

6. Getting married to make somebody else happy.

Sometimes people get married to make someone else happy. It may be parents or it may be relatives. There is no problem in making someone happy if that does not jeopardize one's own marriage. But most of time in such cases marriages occur without exercising enough caution. As a result one may end up marrying someone not compatible.

If you are really serious to make your marriage an exciting, loving and enriching experience you need to be careful about the above things before your marriage.

Internet Marketing and A 50th Wedding Anniversary

Internet Marketing and A 50th Wedding Anniversary by Rick Adams

So what do these two things have in common? On the surface, not much. If your objective is to have a long and successful career with an online business, then sustaining business success is much the same as sustaining a long and successful marriage.

Recently I attended the 50th wedding anniversary of my parents. As I listened to them answer questions about their life and marriage, and how they succeeded, I could see similar traits or characteristics with an online business.

I've been married for 25 years and while I'm not perfect, I've learned a thing or two through my own mistakes. :-)

Here are the common characteristics.

1) Listening – In marriage you have to listen and understand each other's wants and desires. In business you have to listen and understand the customer's wants and desires.

2) Trust – Customers will buy from you again and again if they trust that you have their best interests in mind. In marriage, trust is an essential element to make a marriage successful.

3) Communication – The root cause for most problems generally comes down to poor communication. In business if you don't communicate the benefits of your product you won't make many sales. In marriage if you don't communicate your feelings and let your partner know what is going on inside of your head, the benefit of your partnership will dissolve.

4) Partnership – How successful can you be in business by yourself? Don't you need successful partners to help you through any number of business issues to meet your objectives and goals? A partner could be your web designer, accountant, lawyer, copy writer, business partner, etc. In marriage, partnership is the foundation of two people working together towards a common lifetime goal.

5) Commitment – Want to be a success in business? You have to be committed and passionate in what you are doing. Want to be successful in your marriage? You need to be committed and passionate with each other.

6) New Offerings – In business you must look for new products or services to keep your business moving forward. In marriage you must look for new ways to keep the relationship fresh and interesting.

7) Hard Work – Both marriage and business require long hours, constant attention, and dedication. To be a success, and to sustain success, you must work at it all of the time.

If you factor these characteristics into your online business, you'll go a long way to having a successful and profitable online business.
