What you will read in the next five to eight minutes will not qualify as one of the top ten professionally written articles of the year: guaranteed.

But you will read this, guaranteed: thoughts created on Father's Day from a guy who loves being a dad.

21 REASONS I LOVE BEING A DAD... AND AN OLDER ONE AT THAT

I love the privilege of seeking to inspire, encourage and help my children.

I love loving their mother.

I love the home movies I experience. The live ones. The in house "reality shows" if you please. Kids raggin' on each other, telling mom and dad stories one more time, hugs at the door, serious discussions begun spontaneously, phone calls to say "Hi, I love you," and small hands pressed on a glass door to see the wonder of all wonders: the neighbor's black cat.

I love happy birthday songs: songs sung in love and received the same way -- in love.

I love watching my kids with their kids.

I love the smiles of children and grandchildren.

I love good memories, family pictures on the walls, and cards from "Father's Days past."

A Dad's Thoughts On Dad's day

I love the journey of growing with my children.

I love helping when I can and hurting when I can't. No, I don't enjoy the pain. It's the honor of trying to help because "I'm a dad" that I enjoy.

I love the privilege of praying for my children. I have the distinct honor of joining the heart of God with the needs, desires and dreams of my children.

I love being able to say, "Forgive me" when needed.

I love hearing "Mammaw" sing songs to her grandchildren.

I love being called "Pap."

I love sharing the lives of the kids with their mother.

I love watching the joy in the eyes of my wife as she talks on the phone with her children. (A very frequent event in our home I might add!)

I love giving the grandkids back to my kids just about the moment I think I'm going under (or moments thereafter!).

I love hearing the laughter of family in the other room.

I love being a friend as well as being a dad.

I love being a father-in-law.

I love memories of my dad loving me.

I love being challenged by my wife's love for each child, grandchild, and son-in-law.

DID I MENTION...

I love being a dad?!

Yours for a day filled with beautiful moments in time,

Lee

A Perfect Fathers Day Gift: Publish Dad's Story As An E–book

By Wayne Perkins

A Perfect Fathers Day Gift: Publish Dad's Story As An E–book by Wayne Perkins

From Normandy to Funafuti, from the warehouse to the boardroom, fathers have been giving their lives unselfishly for their families.

The movie Pearl Harbor has just come out and helps remind us that our Fathers are very special people. They will give their lives for their loved ones.

With new technological advances over the years in e–book publishing, it is now possible to publish an e–book about your Dad, and present it for the world to see.

It will cost you a little time but it won't cost you any money. This gift is the perfect gift for honoring Dad.

What is an E–book?

An e–book is simply a digital file or collection of files that, when put together and published, tells a story or may teach you a lesson or a skill.

Four major advantages of publishing this way are:

1. An e–book can be 5 pages long or 500 pages long. There is no longer a need to conform to requirements of book editors, wholesalers and distributors. You are the boss!
2. The author can add sound, photographs and even video to the e–book.
3. An e–book is always a work in progress. The author can add, delete, and change the story in a matter of minutes. Your Dad's story can grow in size over the years.

4. E-books are easily distributed to relatives across the country and those living in other countries.

What better way to give thanks and tribute to our Dad's than to tell his story?

Every year you can add to the story and create a legacy for your children and grandchildren. You can add stories daily if that is what you wish!

Isn't this better than giving him a tie or barbecue mittens?

How do I create an E-book? I am not a technical person!

Here are 5 simple steps to help you make this Dad's Day, her very best.

1. Create your e-book just like you would create any document. You do not need any special formatting.

2. Save your e-book in Microsoft word as a doc. File a text file and/or html file. (An ASCII text file is the printing that you use in the body of your e-mail. People can read it on any computer located around the world)

If you are using Microsoft Word, you would "save as" text or .txt.

3. Set up an account with Infopost.com. They will host your file and give you a free website page to include your description, reviews, pricing and any other information. You may also post this story to your own website if you wish.

If you want to offer your Dad's story for free, designate a "Price" of 0.00.

Or you may set a price for it and earn some money. Infopost will accept credit card payments for your sales and pay you an 80 percent royalty on each sale!

Infopost.com is located at:

<http://www.infopost.com>

4. Look for a link on the top of the page that reads, "Post Info." Follow the directions on listing your e-book, including the description, sample chapter (if you have a large e-book) and then follow the simple directions to up-load your e-book to Infopost.com.

Make sure you include your author name and book title under "keywords" when prompted. Once you fill in the online forms that ask you for pricing and description information, you can post a similar book or hit the browse button on the Infopost page to find and upload your e-book file from your hard disk.

You will then be issued an URL or Internet address of your Dad's story description page.

5. Copy and paste the URL of your e-book description page to your e-mail signature and send the URL to all of you friends and relatives. You may even register you Infopost description page with major search engines.

What about Using Search Engines to Blast My Dad's Story to the World?

Summary:

Now is the time to give your Dad something he will cherish forever. The process of writing the book will be therapeutic for you as well.

Congratulations! You are now an official E-book author and your Dad will be honored on-line forever!

Your Dad will be proud.

Happy Father's Day.
