Alaska Adventure Travel

Alaska adventure travel is very popular for those travelers who want to explore Alaska's vast wilderness and wildlife. This great state has much to offer and depending on how much time you have available, you can experience as much or as little as you would like. You can customize your vacation and include the activities that you like do most, such as sea kayaking, river rafting, hiking, camping, whale watching, and wildlife viewing, which are some of the most popular. Alaska offers white capped mountains, majestic glaciers, streams filled with salmon, national parks and wildlife refuges, and backcountry lodging to rest and reflect on all your activities of the day. Sound like fun to you? There are quite a few travel and tourism companies that offer a wide range of Alaska adventure travel packages, to include just what you want to see and do. Maybe you'll only be able to travel for a few days, that's not a problem. Most of these businesses have everything from short tours lasting just a few hours to those lasting a couple of weeks, it just depends on you.

If you want to see Denali National Park, there are shuttle buses available, or you can book a tour on a private bus, including a variety of guided hikes, fishing, gold panning, and innumerable picture taking opportunities. Mount McKinley National Park is inside of Denali and tours offer spectacular views of this glacier topped majestic mountain, which is the highest peak in North America at a stunning 20,320 feet. Kenai National Wildlife Refuge is another area you may want to explore on your Alaska adventure travel. The Kenai Mountains border this fantastic refuge, with hundreds of glacier fed lakes, and a variety of wildlife species, including caribou, black and brown bears, birds, and sea life such as seals, penguins, and different varieties of whales. In northern Alaska, the Artic region, including the Artic National Wildlife Refuge, is the largest refuge in the National Wildlife Refuge system, according to Alaska Wildland Adventures, with eight million acres designated for this purpose. It is also home to indigenous native tribes, the Inupiat Eskimos and Gwinch'in Indians, who survive using the resources on the refuge, just as their ancestors before them preserving their culture.

Alaska adventure travel will fulfill your desire to be one with nature and Alaska's truly breathtaking environment. Meet the locals, experience the divine ecosystem, and the vastly untouched Alaskan wilderness. It is a trip you won't forget, it will feed your soul, and rejuvenate your spirit. Take advantage of all this great state has to offer; seriously consider Alaska adventure travel for a trip of a lifetime.

What To Expect The Alaska Cruise To Be Like

By Sarah K. Jenkins

You are considering an Alaskan cruise. Won't it be too cold to enjoy? What in the world will you do all of that time on the ship? And, is there really anything great to see besides snow? The fact is that a cruise through Alaska has a lot to offer even to those that are used to spending their vacations in the hot summer sun. Alaska is a wonderful wilderness, even said to be the last frontier within the United States. Therefore, it is a priced location for travel and for that reason, you should take that trip.

First off, the cruise lines travel to Alaska during the late spring to summer months. During this time, temperatures can range from the mid 50's through 75 or more. Although you are surrounded by the water and the slow moving glacier, there is more to Alaska than just snow. For example, take into consideration the mountain ranges, consider a bit of dog sledding, go fishing for King Salmon, see whales in their natural habitat, watch for bears, and even enjoy a completely different and unique American culture that is Alaska.

Finally, when it comes to your cruise ship, there is much to see there as well. Many of the cruise lines offer cruises that offer a wide range of entertainment. You may be able to get into shows, participate in some on board casinos and even enjoy some relaxing time basking in the sun. There are many more things to take advantage of as well.

When you come to Alaska, you can count on a number of things. You will be dazzled by the natural beauty of the land. You will be amazed by the wilderness that you can get so close to. And, you will have the time of your life with the people that you love as well.
