(Excerpt)

ALUCARD

SEEKER OF SERENITY

2004

Chapter 1

The Dilemma

Alucard searches the faces in the room slowly. He has never before sat so close, for so long, to living, human flesh. It is so exciting that he is tingling all over. His usual pattern was to choose his prey, swoop down and dispatch the poor creature as quickly as he could. This was second nature to him, what seemed to be an involuntary action. The small room has very bad lighting and has seen better days. The walls that had once been some type of off white were now gray and streaked from moisture, cigarette smoke and the passing of time. The bare dust covered bulb, that lights the room, is dangling precariously from a semi-exposed wire. The window on his right is boarded up, after being broken out and the cool, night air whistles through the cracks in the board. The floor is covered, in places, with a dirty brown well-worn carpet. When Alucard had walked in he noticed that the carpet would stick to his feet in various places around the room. The table that everyone was sitting around was patched together from two or three other tables and when anyone leaned on the table it tended to rock. It was covered with names and words scratched into its surface. Alucard started to read some of them; Candy, For A Good Time Call 536-2004; Carl, Just Out Of The Joint, 536-1883 and more of the same. On his right sat a young, buxom blond who kept coyly smiling at him and tossing her long blond hair back over her shoulders every chance she got. A foul smelling old man sat to the left. The smell that flowed from him is of decay and death. The urge to leap up and take them all was almost unbearable. But, what choice did he have but to sit here and hope he had finally found an answer to his dilemma. For what seemed an eternity, he had been roaming the earth plucking up humans like grapes from an arbor, as many as he wished. Like grapes some were used for food and others were crushed and broken then nonchalantly tossed aside. Treading through and over the plants of humanity, devouring many but most were just destroyed for his pleasure. Literally gorging himself, night after night on human blood. Many nights his clothes and body would be saturated with human blood, dried and imbedded into his pores. The thrill had left him long ago for this blood sport, but he thought he had no way out, so he continued. A week ago he had found an old weathered, blue book which seemed to have a course of action that might indeed relieve him from his solitary existence.

One Step at a Time in the Job Search

By Marilyn Tellez

What is the first step to take in a job search?

Let's start with "Who Am I?" If the job seeker can answer that question easily, then the rest of what to do, comes easily.

It is often the hardest thing to do in a job quest, or anything else in life.

Answering this question cannot be answered by a recitation of job roles. Job roles are what a person did in a job; the tasks performed.

The "Who Am I?" question has to be answered by an analysis from the job seeker, of just who the person is. Is the job searcher riddled by anxiety? Then, it is wise to admit that being anxious is a part of the personality makeup. We are to assume that it does not interfere with performing a job. Is the job seeker optimistic? Then that part of the personality can be emphasized in the job seeker and let that QUALITY be a part of the what the job seeker offers in a job.

Any personality trait, from pessimistic or optimistic, cannot be hidden away for long. So, answering the "Who Am I?" question is to be dealt with honestly and PRECISELY. Without knowing oneself well, the rest of the job search is just an empty exercise.

Employers look for whole people who often have quirks, possess good qualities, and able to do the tasks the job entails. Whole job seekers have a less stressful time looking for a job! They are always impressive!
