Are You A Formal Or Casual Host?

By George Meszaros

If you enjoy planning and preparing for elegant parties with elegant floral arrangements, gourmet food, elaborate décor that makes your guests feel like they have just arrived at a five star hotel, you are a formal host. If you feel more comfortable preparing a barbeque feast for your guests' comfortable sitting amongst your friends in your backyard, you are a casual host. If you are neither, you may be somewhere in between. If you feel comfortable either way, consider yourself lucky.

Regardless of what kind of event you are planning, make sure you know exactly how much time and effort you are willing to put into the process. What kind of party you throw has a lot to do with how much money you can afford to spend. As a rule of thumb, casual affairs usually cost significantly less than formal affairs.

A good example of a formal party is a wedding. If you feel comfortable organizing such an event, so be it. If you felt uncomfortable by the constraints of such a formal event, you probably want to stick with the more casual route.

If you felt more comfortable at a casual party, try to remember why? What were the things that made you feel good at the party? Was it the food? Was it the location? Was it the guests you have met, or the games you have played? Whatever it is that makes you feel good, be sure to include in your plans.

It is possible you have equally enjoyed both the formal and casual party. You may be able to find both experiences fun.

If you would like to host a formal party, make sure you set your budget early. Your budget is going to have a lot to do with how many guests you can invite and what kind of food and drinks you will serve. Even if you have small budget you could still have a formal party, but you need to invite less guests. For example a party of four-to-six people would be a great small party. Just because you have less people at your party it doesn't mean you will have less fun. The number of guests you have at your party has nothing to do with how much fun you have.

Clothes For Women Who Love Casual Womens Clothing by Bowe Packer

Today women love dressing casual because it suits their fast paced and changing lifestyle, this is why womens casual clothing is here to stay. They want to feel good about themselves and their femininity, but at the same time be able to do everything their life demands of them while looking good and feeling comfortable. Many things are nearly impossible to do in formal dress apparel. Clothing manufactures and distributors are now seeing that casualwear is not just a fad and are offering a line of casual wear for all to choose from. Clothing stores online are fast recognizing this dress style and offering the right flare in their line of casual clothing for women.

Women want that built-in comfort factor, but with the right style, look and flare in their casual clothing. As we can look around and see, womens casualwear is not a thing of the past, but a growing and lasting line of clothes for clothing stores to offer to women.

Women love the idea of simplicity with a style, which is what casual wear for women has to offer. They love the idea that they can throw something on and wear it all day whether they are a stay at home mom or a working mother. It is not un-heard-of for women to be working, rushing around picking up the kids, going grocery shopping and transporting kids to sports practice. casual clothing should be designed and built for this fast paced, sometimes never ending world. Clothing stores need to continue to recognize and deliver the casualwear goods.

Women's fashion has certainly changed forever after World War II Because of the shortage of fabrics during and after the war, surplus fabrics like cotton and denim were used for the first time in women's fashion and casual clothing. A drastic change from the way womens fashion was up until this point. And this is what began the American propensity towards casual wear for women, which still shows up today throughout clothing stores around the world. Womens casual is fast becoming the overriding criteria when choosing comfortable clothes. For women it is all about the comfort they reap when wearing casual clothing that today's clothing stores are finally recognizing and making available in their line of clothing.

The internet is fast becoming a place for individuals to shop or find those hard to find items. So, if you are looking for clothes or womens casual, look at the online stores that offer womens casual clothes with the best selection.
