Benefits of DVR Players by Randy McClure

A DVR player's best benefit is enabling people to have more control over their day-to-day schedules. A Digital Video Recorder (DVR) allows you to record video in digital format on the DVR's hard drive. A DVR is a cross between a video tape recorder and a DVD recordable drive on a computer, but a DVR is a lot more. Here are some benefits of DVR players.

Watch Your Favorite Programs On Your Own Time.

With DVR players, you can record hours and hours of TV programs for viewing later. The amount of programs that you record is only limited by the size of your DVR player's hard drive. This enables you to watch your favorite reality TV show or soap opera when you want to watch it. Surveys of DVR owners show that recording TV shows for future viewing is the biggest benefit for owning a DVR player.

Archiving Favorite TV Programs.

Some DVR owners use their DVR player to archive their favorite TV programs and TV series. Archiving is best if you hook your DVR player to your home computer network.

Digital TV Best For DVR Recording.

The recording quality of a DVR player is best when recording digital TV versus analog TV programs. This is one reason why DVRs got their start with satellite TV with the TiVo DVR. Satellite TV is digital. If you have cable TV, non-digital programs are getting to be less of an issue as many cable companies are now going digital. See TiVo and Satellite Company Deals

Bypass TV Ads, Instant Replay, Freeze Screen.

Another popular benefit of DVR players is the ability to treat TV programs just like a DVD movie. You can by-pass TV ads, you can replay a TV program scene, or just freeze the screen. Studies show that many DVR owners still watch TV ads, but just bypass ads that are of no interest to them.

DVRs Are Great For Recording Security Surveillance Video.

DVR players are quickly becoming the most popular way to record and store surveillance video. A DVR player frees you from having to handle bulky video tapes and also the digital images are of better quality than video. Businesses are the most avid users of DVR players for security surveillance recording. This is because DVR players practically make security surveillance hands-free with no changing out video tapes all the time.

Share and Display Digital Media on DVR Player With Home Network.

DVR players are a great way to share digital media between your home network and your TV. Most DVR players are easy to hook up to your home network as they use an USB cable which is fairly standard way to hook up to computers. With a DVR player hooked to your home network or home media center you can view digital photos and other digital media on your TV. If you have two DVRs on your home network or media center, you can share digital TV programs. Another great benefit of hooking up your DVR player to your home network is that you can remotely schedule your DVR player to record TV programs.

Television on Your Schedule with a Digital Video Recorder (DVR)

By Becky Jacobs

The introduction of the VCR changed so much for the television viewer. Before the introduction of the VCR, you had to watch the show when it was broadcast by the network - that was your only option. If you recorded your favorite show, you were able to watch it when you wanted to - and as many times as you wanted to. All you needed was a blank video tape and a VCR. That has all changed with the DVR.

A DVR, or Digital Video Recorder, is technology that takes all the great features of a VCR and places it in the digital age. Instead of multiple tapes, you have a single hard drive. Instead of degrading tape quality issues, shows are now recorded digitally that can last forever. Instead of programming a VCR through a complicated interface of tiny buttons on a remote control, you can program your DVR through a simple point and click interface, possibly even from your home computer.

In addition to the ability to watch your shows whenever you want to, there is another benefit to the DVR that most people only mention quietly - the ability to quickly forward through your commercials. With everything being digital, a 30 second skip can be done with the click of a button. Imagine getting back 10 minutes of your life back for every hour of television your watch!

DVRs come in many shapes and sizes. There are set-top boxes that go right on your television set. They don't require any other products to work. Some brand names of these options include Tivo and ReplayTV. Many satellite companies (and digital cable companies) such as Dish Network and Direct TV have options as well. Microsoft Windows Media Center is an option for Windows users. There are also options for the Mac and/or Linux user.

Once you have a DVR record your shows, you can watch them whenever you want. Some systems even let you transfer the content to a DVD or your laptop.

The Digital Video Recorder (DVR) changes everything for the television viewer. I hope you can join the revolution.
