Christian music has really taken off in the last couple of years. You can find mp3 songs for some of the biggest acts like Jaci Velasquez and DC talk online. The songs are great but then you also need a site with accurate Christian music lyrics as well. It's not fun to sing along with the tunes if you don't have the words in front of you.

Christian music lyrics are usually uplifting, down home, positive and very family friendly. If you have younger children who are always online and listening to their favorite bands, you want to find the right online music service that will give them the ability to import and store the lyrics on their playlist.

Christian music, unlike most other genres gives all of its power through the lyrics. If you see it and read it, you can enhance your enjoyment and learn more about daily Christian living.

In addition, access to Christian music lyrics might help to convince secular fans to buy more this type of music and support the new wave of popular artists. If you look at the average song from Jaci, Points of Grace or Nicole Mullen, the stories and messages in the songs are universal and can easily apply to secular music lovers.

They are not showcasing their faith, but instead showcasing their life and how faith has impacted them in becoming better people. In addition Christian musicians like their country counterparts still rely on good, old fashion story telling. The art of weaving entire stories around love, loss, family values and worship in a 4 minute song is still pretty common in christian music lyrics.

Thankfully, getting access to Contemporary Christian Music lyrics is easier with the resources you can get from the online music stores.

So how do you get these lyrics?

You start by looking for an mp3 music service that offers direct lyrics from the music publisher or via plugins, software upgrades or on a fee per song basis.

Can you find good gospel song lyrics online?

Can you find good gospel song lyrics online? by Syd Johnson

You can get some gospel songs lyrics with mp3 songs from major commercial music services. The only problem is that you won't get a lot of the stuff by older, more established acts. Let's face it, the music industry is driven by what is new, hip and youthful. This applies to all genres including gospel music.

There are some free fan sites where you can find gospel song lyrics, but it can be difficult to tell if the lyrics are accurate. Your best bet is to try one the software applications that will scour the web for song lyrics and import it into your mp3 player. The larger lyrics directories will have gospel lyrics because they are user driven directories.

The lyrics can be submitted by anyone who has access to the text from the CD case, or by transcribing them from the radio. The open nature of the directories gives users the ability to create entire categories and update them if that genre is underserved.

Why do I suggest the software route?

The time factor. Since Christian music and gospel music in particular is still relatively underserved on the internet, a freeware application that searches for the lyrics while you are surfing the web, playing games online, or chatting on instant messenger is essential.

You don't have to wade through tons of spam and amateur collections to get the complete lyrics from your favorite songs.

Also, you want to have the lyrics available while you are listening to the songs. It's no fun to have the music playing on your mp3 player while searching your emails for the lyrics.

Where do I start?

Check with the music service where you are getting your mp3. If there is an option to search by genre, you can simply type in gospel song lyrics and wait for the software to update your files and save your changes. Look for discussion boards and user request services as well.

If you are getting your mp3s from a really large digital music site try to connect with other users who share your interest in gospel music and ask them if they have access to gospel song lyrics on their own or from a niche site.
