Caravans Getting More Popular

By Alison White

After caravans made history centuries ago, became associated with the hippy lifestyle. Nowadays the caravan is having a surprising recovery.

Knights used the caravans in Crusades and the people who afforded to have one used it as tool for moving around. The conquest of Wild West is probably the one who made the caravans famous. What would it have been like to cross the Rocky Mountains without the covered wagons? The alternative was a cold draughty ride on a horse or tramping along in the mud. Only a hundred years ago you could see brightly painted horse-pulled Romany caravans on our roads.

But what about now, when you have roads and maps and so many means of getting where you want? What would be now the role of caravans? You can find the answer in the need of freedom people are still having.

In the last century motor-car ownership took off but the same thing happened to caravans and soon drivers found themselves queuing behind lines of caravans on the way to the coast. For decades the typical image of motor-caravanners was probably that of a hippy family in an old VW. Nowadays the image of caravans is so much improved and in many cases caravan became a luxury home-from-home with a price to match.

By the time more and more people that had money to spend became interested in having their own home from home that could give them the freedom to travel all over the place in good condition, the static caravan took off. These uncool and static caravans located by the sea or by the wild forests are now history.

Lately caravanning became one of the country's most popular holidays. Celebrities enjoy this way of traveling or more accurate this way of living. Actresses like Helen Mirren and Tracy Shaw, singers like Mark Owen, Chris Evans and even Sir Jimmy Saville are owners and satisfied users of caravans. And now we can talk about fancy, luxury and styled caravans.

The classic old hand built caravans, such as the Stirling and the Carlight, used to be expensive – the top of the market. Back in the fifties, these caravans were bought and run by owners of the Armstrong Siddeley, Lagonda and Rover cars. The owners thought nothing about embarking on overseas trips with them of thousands of miles.

Try A Static Caravan Holiday

By Sherwood Caravans

Once you've tried a static caravan holiday, you could find yourself converted, like many other holiday makers before you!

People often shy away from static caravan holidays, worried about lack of space or facilities, but anyone who has stayed in a static caravan recently will tell you that it's an affordable, spacious and comfortable way to spend your holiday.

Why should you give it a try?

- Convenience - static caravans are usually found on dedicated holiday parks, which are in an ideal location, with easy access to the beaches, shops and local attractions. This makes them a great base for a holiday - you don't need to drive long distances or worry about parking in order to get to popular attractions, and you can return to your caravan whenever you need to.
- Cost - static caravans are cheaper to run and maintain than other holiday accommodation, and that means that their weekly rental price is usually lower. Compared to hotel rooms for a family, or the cost of a self catering holiday cottage, static caravans are surprisingly affordable and great value for money.
- Comfort - if you imagine static caravans to be pokey and uncomfortable, then think again. Over the years, static caravans have adopted a range of fixtures and fittings that have turned them into a home-from-home. Separate bedroom and living space combines with fitted bathrooms and kitchens, mains drainage and hot and cold running water to provide a spacious, comfortable living environment.

With benefits like these, it's easy to see why more people are choosing to book a static caravan for their holiday. A comfortable holiday at affordable prices, with everything you need close at hand is
