Casino Affiliate Programs: Earning Real Income Online

By Blake Stevenson

Thousands of people trawl the Internet each and every day looking for 'get-rich-quick' schemes.

The dream of earning a significant wage for not a lot of work is a dream that drives people to try some of the more outrageous ideas. The dream of being able to quit your dull everyday job and earn a living at home with the family, investing just a few hours here and there. Unfortunately few if any of these schemes really work, even if they produce results the likelihood of them creating enough revenue to finish with full-time work forever is very small. Away from the world of e-books promising unexpected bounties and software that can do everything for you is a real world where real people make money each an every day. This is called the online affiliate program.

This is a proven tried and tested method of adding extra income to your site, simply by adding a few adverts. There are no secrets, no impossible guarantees and best of all no money to pay up front. It may sound too good to be true, but the truth is very different. Every time you have accessed the Internet the truth to making money online has probably been right under your nose. All of those pop-ups and flashing banners are owned by affiliates associated with other sites. The vast majority of major sites and even smaller personal sites have taken advantage of what is a very simple but hugely effective way to earn money.

Industries like that of online gaming and casinos can credit much of their success to advertising in this cost free fashion. By offering website owners free promotional tools and banners they can spread their web of visibility. The more people they can reach out to the more likely they are to pick up some new custom. It is through this affiliate scheme that they can produce some of their best results. Because unlike in standard advertising where one company pays another to promote them in a simple one off transaction, affiliates earn more as they attract more people. Therefore it is a huge incentive for the affiliates to build a large customer base for not only the site but for themselves. These bonuses and constant benefits for both parties keep the both industries thriving and everybody happy. With affiliates earning anywhere between 15 and 35% of a players lifetime money generated, there is little wonder how or why people keep joining and keep earning through affiliate programs. Whilst no website is guaranteed to make money, the budget and amount of work are kept in check by the affiliate. They can invest as much or as little as they want. The more an affiliate is willing to invest in terms of time and money the higher the chances of success, much like in any other industry.

'Resistance' means Success for Affiliates

'Resistance' means Success for Affiliates by David McKenzie

I often receive emails in my inbox asking me to join new affiliate programs. In fact, I probably receive about 20 such emails every week.

What should you do when you receive offers to join a new affiliate program?

Usually the email goes something like "Please join our new incredible affiliate program that pays 50% direct commissions and 20% commissions for the 2nd tier ... "

Your mind immediately focuses on the 20% direct commission and 10% indirect commissions that you receive on most of your existing affiliate programs.

It's not enough. You could be earning more. You could be earning half on every sale! Quick, you better jump on this new affiliate program as it sounds like a real winner.

But wait...

The mistake you probably made is to join the new affiliate program at all.

Follow these 3 "Rules of Resistance" when deciding whether to join a new affiliate program. These will help you decide whether joining a new affiliate program is really the right thing to do.

1. You should ONLY join a new affiliate program if you can remain focussed by adding it. Will it detract from the affiliate programs you already promote? Does it "fit" with the existing programs you promote.

2. An affiliate program is only as successful as the affiliate promoting it. It does not matter how good a new program sounds; unless you can completely devote yourself to the marketing of it, you will not be successful with it. Ask yourself the question "Will you have enough time to adequately promote this new affiliate program?"

3. Will joining this new program mean you have less time to promote your other affiliate programs? If the answer is yes then your income from your existing programs will suffer. Unless you can be completely confident you can cover this loss of income with the new affiliate program, then do not join it.

Affiliates are always being bombarded with new opportunities and new affiliate programs that have even bigger and better commissions. However, unless you remain focussed, these new opportunities are unlikely to result in greater success.

Often, resistance is the best path to success. Resist joining too many affiliate programs. I do it every day.
