Why Debt Counseling Works

By L. Sampson

Many people living in debt struggle and fight their way out, only to be sucked back in just years later. These people live in constant limbo between good credit and bad. They often do not know how to permanently resolve their debt issues. Debt Counseling can help people in these situations. It provides the tools needed to get out of debt and stay out.

Education is the Key

When you get debt counseling, they don't just consolidate your debt and send you a bill, they give you the tools you need to stay out of debt. Debt Counselors put you on a budget and teach you how to properly manage your money. They talk to you about what went wrong in the past, why you spent your money and what you spent it on. They help you develop a successful financial plan. If you are educated about money and can identify where you went wrong, you are less likely to make the same mistakes twice. If you see a trend developing, you can stop it in its tracks.

Good Advice is Free

Many people in debt spend money to get out of debt, but a good debt counselor is, in most cases, free. Most non profit organizations are free or charge very small fees. As an added bonus, if you go to a non-profit they will do all of your debt consolidation, and consult with the credit card companies you owe, as well as counsel you about your debt.

Support when you need it

When you go to a debt counselor, you are not just consolidating and writing checks every month, you are actively working on a plan to permanently get out of debt. You can meet multiple times to discuss finances. Also, debt counselors do not just counsel you on your debt, they counsel in every area of finance including saving and setting up household budgets, which are two keys to staying out of debt.
