Web Sites That Stand Out

by Carol A.

The Wide World Web has information that some of us aren't aware of. Months ago, I needed help with designing my web site. One that would stand out. Well, it took awhile to find. I checked other pages by writers to get some ideas.

Some web portals will help you design your own pages in minutes (which is great for beginners).

As a writer of mostly adult fiction work, I wanted something bold and colorful. Any good search engine will take you to the right sources by using certain key words. But, use the ones that relate to your particular field.

Zdnet.com is my favorite one. They have loads of information from web designing to rating sources. The price isn't bad either. Especially, for those who are on a budget. You can pay as low as $8.95 a month to setup an account. I compared them to another service that I no longer use under the name, 20m.com. The only problem: they had plain average designs. None that stood out. We all want pages that will draw people to our sites. And it doesn't matter if you're a writer or not.

Now, would you like to check out my site? Well, all right. But it needs more work done. So far, I only have one page. There's a leopard's tail at the bottom. Moving as if its waiting for a reply. None of my stories or poems are shown. I rather work with individuals on a one-on-one basis. Leave a message. Let me know what you think about my site. My first eBook is on sale at: <http://www.publish4u.com>.

My URL is: <http://pages.zdnet.com/akila>

Thank you very much,

Carol A.

Picking Out The Best Web Design For Your Website

By Joe Goertz

Companies who set up websites for the general public to view should choose their web design options carefully. One who sets up a website needs to ensure that the web design itself is as perfect as it possibly can be. There are a few ways in which the website owner can produce the most attractive and user-friendly web design possible.

The first tip website owners should take in mind when perusing web design concepts is what type of individual is going to be viewing their website the majority of the time. By recognizing one's target audience, the website owner can ensure that the web design structure is one which is going to attract and impress all who set eyes upon the website. This provides the website owner and web designer with a good place to start with regard to the particular web design which is most suitable for the website.

One should also make sure that the web design is not too overwhelming for viewers. If there are a lot of pictures along with volumes of text on the webpage, the viewer has more of a chance of being distracted and not receiving the specific message which the website owner is trying to relay. For example, if a website is designed to sell kites and the webpage revolves around vivid pictures of butterflies and crowded text, it may take away from the overall point of the website which is to sell a product to the online consumer. It is important to not go overboard with the web design of a website.

With that said, it is imperative that the web design is not drab. One will be much more interested in viewing a website that has color, some pictures and a good amount of text throughout the webpage. It is beneficial to ensure that there is a little bit of everything but not a lot of one specific type of thing in the web design format. This will help to ensure that the website visitor is attracted to the web design but not overwhelmed by the content or graphics.

The web design of a website should also be of a unique nature. If one has ever viewed multiple websites selling a similar product, they know how common it is to come across web designs of a similar nature. One who owns a website wants their website to stand out to the visitors and persuade them to return to the particular website for their products or content time and time again. One can make this happen by utilizing a web design that is unique and different from all others that website visitors may come across on the Internet.

Web design is something which can go in many different directions. Therefore, by following the previously mentioned tips one may be that much more likely to use a web design for their website which is sure to please all who come across it.
