

Experiencing the most of London in just a few days

This Free E-Book is brought to you by Natural-Aging.com.

100% Effective Natural Hormone Treatment
Menopause, Andropause And Other Hormone Imbalances
Impair Healthy Healing In People Over The Age Of 30!

Experiencing the most of London in just a few days

By Jennifer Bravorski

Day or night, London thrives with life. A city that seems to have never fallen asleep from the time of its first founding, everything that one might want to experience can be found within the city center. "When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life; for there is in London all that life can afford." The writer Samuel Johnson said this in the 18th century, and it can still be said of today's contemporary London. Naturally, a city that offers all that life can afford needs numerous explorations, but with just a few days, one can experience the rich taste of this flavorful city. To start with, every visitor to London must dab into the city's history, from the first days of its founding to its dark medieval secrets to the monarchy's priceless crown jewels. Next on the menu is the pure pleasure of London's aesthetics; the city's center is full of charming parks and English gardens, narrow streets which unexpectedly disclose the scents of exotic restaurants, and various shops and markets selling from the most tasteful and chic to the most trendy and unconventional. When night hits, it rocks. The drinks pour, the laughs are loud, the beats pump, and the dancing is intense. London is a thriving city, and day and night it keeps its visitors entertained with its history from its first foundations, its city center's physical beauty, and its nightlife, making it a city that never sleeps.

London's history is so rich and so vast, that the highest to the lowest level of history fan will be interested. While London acknowledges its first century Roman founding, it honors Boadicea with a statue near Parliament. Boadicea was the British queen who raised an army and fought back the Romans to London, where she burned the city. Those who find such violent female figures interesting will enjoy museums like Madame Tussauds, a very lifelike wax museum, and the London Dungeon, where the horrors and terrors of medieval London come to life, including a selection of Britain's most infamous women throughout history. The Tower of London houses the crown jewels as well as tales of mysterious prisons for important prisoners. Fusing history and art, the National Portrait Gallery depicts portraits of Britain's most famous people throughout the centuries. The British Museum has one of the largest and best archeological collections of worldwide artifacts, including the Rosetta stone and Lindow Man. Fortunately, while these museums give a good feel for London's past, the visitor does not actually have to deal with the battles, plagues, and fires that London has survived.

And relishing the calm and beauty of today's civilized London, the visitor can peacefully enjoy London's aesthetic city center. A walk along Oxford Street brings out the consumer in all, while nearby Hyde

Experiencing the most of London in just a few days

Park still manages to provide the serenity of the countryside in a city setting. Except, of course, speaker's corner, where people proclaim their message for the world to hear. Northeast of the park is Portobello Market, one of London's many outdoor markets, selling the best in antiques. Between the parks and busy shopping streets are quaint streets of times past, leading to unexpected surprises like central London's Covent Gardens, where flower girls still sell beautiful bouquets. Seeing all this from a bird's eye view gives a comprehensive overview of what lies below, and the London eye shows just that from the center of the center. A free option offering a bird's eye view is Primrose Hill, a small park in the north of London perched on a hill, overlooking the rest of the city. Hunger is bound to strike at some (or many) points of such jam-packed days, and the city's flavors will suit all tastes. From traditional English fare to such exotics as Indian restaurants, which are quickly assimilating and becoming typical London fare, any array of food can be found in between. And what better time to plan the evening out than during mealtime, when feet are resting and stomachs are happy!

The day is done, the eve is planned, and as night approaches, day is just dawning for those that never sleep. A typical London night out will start at the pub with a group of friends, enjoying the local beers on tap and friendly conversations speckled with bursts of laughter. Of course, if it's a football or rugby night, the atmosphere will be quite serious and concentrated till the winner is known. After whetting the whistle at the pub, many will go on to dance at one of London's countless dance clubs. In such an international city, dancing will include every type of dancing, like techno, trance, hip-hop, Latin, ethnic, and raves. After the drinks and dancing, some late night chow down will soothe the stomach in the countless late night or fast food restaurants lighting up London's night streets.

Experiencing the most of London in a few days is so enjoyable with London's rich history, its delightful walks through its sophisticated and beautiful city center, and ever amazing transformation into a nightlong party. A world-class city aged 2000 years and still growing in popularity, London has aged better than a bottle of good wine. London never reached 'a' perfection - it continually recreates perfection for every generation that shares in its life, and that is why no one can ever forget this city.

This article was written by Jennifer Bravorski with support from the Jesmond Dene Hotel, which is a cozy bed and breakfast located in the heart of London. To learn more about how bed and breakfasts can add to your travel experience, please visit

<http://www.jesmonddenehotel.co.uk/>

Use London for your company's big meetings

By David Wilson

There are lots of reasons why you should use London for your company's big meetings, and here are three of the most obvious:

1. London is one of the world's most vibrant and exciting cities
2. London is well served by international and local travel links

Experiencing the most of London in just a few days

3. London has a plethora of world-class venues; from basic rooms in big hotels to large custom-built, state-of-the-art conference centres.

London is considered a world leader for business; as a result the facilities that the city has to offer are tailored to the discerning business traveller. So, if you opt to use London for your company's big meetings you won't be far from anything that you would need, either professionally or for leisure.

There are almost 94,000 hotel rooms in London and over 6,000 eating establishments, so finding somewhere to stay or have dinner is never a problem! With accommodation to match every corporate budget and with many establishments offering an all-in rate including meeting rooms, London is an ideal venue for any company's big meetings!

There is no doubt that because of its fantastic transport links – two major international airports at Heathrow and Gatwick plus three smaller ones, major motorway and road links, a major Eurostar hub and extensive public transport – the capital is easy to get to from most parts of the world. And once in London the excellent integrated public transport system allows easy, cost-effective travel from hotel to venue and vice versa.

After business is concluded why not treat your company's employees to a taste of the superb London nightlife? With restaurants offering every type of cuisine and a superb theatre district in the capital's West End there's always somewhere to go and something fabulous to do! There are 150 theatres, 200 nightclubs and over 3,800 pubs in London. So, after the big meeting is concluded there are a multitude of leisure and entertainment options for you and your fellow employees.

Put your employees in the sort of bustling, energetic environment offered by England's capital are they are bound to be inspired before they even set foot in London for your company's big meeting; they'll be enthused and energised by the city itself.

London is fast-moving towards a 24 hour, seven days a week culture so regardless of the time of arrival of your delegates or the time of your big meeting then there are facilities to cater for them. Certain hotels offer early riser breakfasts from 4 a.m. in the morning, or alternatively later riser breakfasts until 12 noon. With so much going for the capital you should really consider using London for your company's big meetings.

Article by David Wilson

<http://www.venue team.co.uk>

Experiencing the most of London in just a few days

This Free E-Book has been brought to you by Natural-Aging.com.

100% Effective Natural Hormone Treatment
Menopause, Andropause And Other Hormone Imbalances
Impair Healthy Healing In People Over The Age Of 30!