By Jerry Smith

The first feature of concern should be the durability of the bags. Will they survive the rough handling when traveling? Will the locks hold? Durability is important whether you are a recreational or frequent traveler.

Expandable luggage is great for short trips and will allow you to pack more in one bag. They can be great carry on bags that will hold your various needs of the next twenty-four hours or so. They are great to have if you are planning on bringing back souvenirs.

Other features include laptop compatibility, luggage with pull bars, luggage with telescoping handles, and luggage with wheels. There is upright luggage and horizontal luggage that will meet different needs. Consider the weight of the luggage itself because it will add to the weight allowance of the traveling company.

Including water resistant bags is great if you will be swimming while traveling as they will hold wet bathing suits and towels nicely without saturating other items. Scratch resistant luggage will retain its initial appearance for a much longer time.

Adjustable or removable outer straps help identify your luggage and prevent it from popping it open. Some luggage have inner elastic straps to hold items in place. Toiletry cases are included in some luggage sets as well as totes that will hold your books or other traveling activities. Free luggage tags are sometimes available free with your luggage.

Consider the material of the luggage. Sturdy nylon fabric such as the stuff gym bags and backpacks are made. This fabric can also be waterproof. The hard frames of some luggage take the brutal handling in baggage areas better than soft luggage might be. Look for the features you want and you will likely find them.
