By Robert Thatcher

Just the aroma of smoked fish can confer you a festive mood. In fact, it can afterwards drag you to a luscious and appetizing meal. The festive mood will be contagious and the fun will linger.

Isn't it amazing how a simple grilling session on your front yard can trigger delightful bond and overwhelming fun? People, by nature, longs for fun and excitement. Nobody wants to sulk in one corner all the time. He sure wants to take a break and enjoy.

Every person deserves to be happy. Moreover, if you are throwing a bashing small shindig, pool party or a simple gathering, let your guests enjoy to the fullest by preparing them their favorite entertainment and foods.

For sure, just every one likes grilled foods. In order to enjoy the gathering be sure to have gas grills around.

Gas grills have metal box. At the bottom of the box, there are tube-shaped liquid propane burners which are responsible in providing the grills with fuel. Traditionally, propane or natural gas fuel the gas grills. With them, grilling is made faster and easier.

The gas grills' burners are topped by warming the exterior of the metal bars, ceramics and lava rocks.

Modern day gas grills are more beneficial. If you want fast pre-heating, gas grills will help you do it pretty fast. Fast in the sense that it can preheat in a matter of 10 to 15 minutes.

Second benefit is its longevity compared to charcoal. One 20-pound tank can last up to 14 hours. You will no longer fret about running short of charcoal. Propane tank is more reliable, that is.

If you are worrying about the mess of grilling, worry no more. Since, gas grills do not use fire starters or charcoal, mess will be out of the situation.

Grass grills use multiple burners. They are especially designed to give superior heat control to secure easy grilling.

If you are contemplating of purchasing gas grills, here are the considerations that you have to take note of:

1. Consider having stainless steel, cast aluminum or porcelain-coated steel for a solid gas grill construction.
2. It is vital to have a built-in thermometer to check the grill temperature.
3. Lava rock system is also good in collecting grease that can result to flare-ups. Try to look for them in the gas grill that you are to purchase.
4. For easy and safe gas grill lighting, be sure to have a push-button ignition.
5. To monitor fuel levels your gas grill must have gas gauge.
6. If you can have three burners that can work separately, the better. This will give you flexibility when it comes to controlling heat.
7. For easy cleaning, the best gas grill material will be stainless steel or porcelain.

Aside from the aforementioned features, you can also incorporate rotisserie or smoker box, side burners, additional outer shelving or work space and removable secondary grill racks.

In order to have a long-lasting gas grill, maintenance is a must. Regularly check on grease catch pan so as not to create flare-ups. Check for leaks, cracks and holes. Finally, be sure to detach tanks from gas grills and keep them out-of-doors.

Transporting Your BBQ Grill

By Linda Davis

Portable barbecue grills are lots of fun, but you need to know how to transport them safely. You don't want a fun event to end in tragedy. There is a growing demand for portable grills. A portable grill can be transported to a campsite or to a picnic and be up and running in a matter of minutes. Having a portable grill for use at home has its advantages as well. You can move it into the garden or set it up in the garage.

Fun, Grill Sizzle

To meet this demand, grill manufacturers have come up with several models. These grills are light, easy to transport, and can be set up easily. They are also budget-friendly - they range in price from $50 to $200.

They should, however, be handled with care — especially the propane grills. No one should take chances with natural gas or liquid propane — it is highly inflammable and can cause an explosion if handled improperly or in a careless manner.

Make sure that your portable gas grill has no holes or leaks. Though it may seem tedious, you should always check any type of gas grill for leaks. You should not light cigarettes or candles around the grill, as even a small gas leak could trigger an explosion. Also, never tamper with the safety valve fixed on the propane tank.

Similarly, the propane tank should be kept immobile when transporting the grill to another location. It should not be allowed to roll around in the trunk of the car or in the back of a pick-up truck, because that much motion increases the gas pressure inside the tank, and the tank could explode.

Charcoal grills don't suffer from these disadvantages. They are less delicate and can be transported with ease. Their only negative point is that they can take hours to light and warm up in damp or rainy weather. On such occasions, it is better to carry a propane grill despite its disadvantages. Also, use caution when transporting any kind of portable grill after using it, as it could be hot.

Portable grills are fun and easy to use. Take one to your next BBQ or cookout!
