Getting Older

These are the views of one person. One and the same person. The only difference is the change of views as the person gets older.

Before I leave school – Old people are smelly and wee the floor at old peoples homes. They are always grumpy and tell you off a lot

Age 21 –35 – Old people are a bloody nuisance. They are so slow and keep getting in the way. These old people stand in the queue at Tesco's and actually count out the pounds and pennies to the exact amount of the shopping bill. They don't carry credit cards and they are too tight to use their mobile phones which are normally cast offs from their kids which are clunky and analogue with a battery life of 3 hours.

Age 35 – 45 I don't mind old people that much. I have started getting grey hairs and have become worried about my pension in retirement. My kids are nearly grown up now and I wonder what nursing home they will put me in when I get older?

Age 45 – 65 Things are not the same as before. There is no respect for the elderly. Elderly people have to put up with young whipper snappers giving them verbal abuse and there is no common courtesy any longer. The government do not support elderly people properly. Elderly people are not appreciated.

65 – 75 Having retired I am so glad to be out of the rat race. I worry if I will have enough money to live on and whether my children's visits will continue to get less and less frequent. I wonder what happens when my limbs fail to carry me any longer and which nursing home I will end up in before I die. I am most worried about my frailty and crime. I worry about being vulnerable to criminals and I think the world is going in the wrong direction. No one cares about the elderly – except the elderly.

Getting Older

People's views do change the older they get and the closer they get to death. However, perhaps the biggest worry for anyone around the 35–55 year age should be the lack of pension provision they are likely to receive in retirement unless of course they have made other plans. Things are going to get much worse for pensioners – not better!

Anyone younger than 35? Hey, you still have a chance to do something about it...

Home Management - Get Rid Of The Lead

By Elizabeth Newberry

If you're considering purchasing a new home, you probably want to pinch a few pennies along the way. One major way to cut back on the cost of moving into a new home is by purchasing an older home. Actually, not only does purchasing an older home help save you some money, it also helps preserve the structures of our country's past.

However, while they still seem to be in good condition upon visual inspection, many of today's older homes contain dangerous materials beneath the surface. One of the most common dangerous materials found in older homes is lead paint, and as we all know, or should know, lead paint can lead to lead poisoning - especially in children.

You shouldn't run from a good deal just because it may contain lead paint; however, you should take all necessary measures for good home management, and this includes checking for the presence of and removing any lead paint in the home. Not only will this protect your family, but it will also help you cut the costs of homeowner's insurance. Many homeowners are required to purchase homeowner's insurance if they have borrowed money in order to pay for the home.

The beginning steps of home management are a sort of balancing act. You need to make the necessary repairs to the home before you move in, and you need to purchase homeowner's insurance. At the same time, you don't want to get a homeowner's insurance quote with dangerous chemicals in the home, such as lead paint. Have your home tested for the presence of lead paint. Remember, most homes have several layers of paint, so be sure to scrape through them all. If lead is detected in any layer of paint, get rid of it!

Getting rid of lead paint isn't just part of effective home management. It can help lower your homeowner's insurance rates as well as promote your family's health.
