Making a living from home has been the dream of millions of Americans. Since the Internet was born, many have ventured out to make thousands of dollars on their own every month, even enough for many to quit their regular jobs. And now, with gas prices at or near all-time highs, it's a great time to show your disgust by giving up your commute and staying at home.

I know what you're thinking: "How can I possibly make enough money to quit my job? How can I take that risk?" It's true that Internet millionaires are rare, but if you're looking to supplement or even replace your current salary, it may be easier than you think.

No matter what kind of business you're looking at or what promises they make of being the "next big thing," it all comes down to one basic idea: if you have something people want, you can sell it for profit.

No matter how high-tech or advanced technology gets, the number one reason people even surf the Internet is to find information. You're doing it yourself right now. Even better, many people are willing to pay for good information, and that's where those good old ebooks come in.

You don't have to be a writer, and you hardly have to lift a finger once your business is in place. If you want to write your own ebook and sell it, great. You probably have some know-how, experience, or talent others would benefit from. However, there are many ebooks available online with full resale rights. So once you purchase your own copy, you profit 100%.

I firmly believe that anyone, regardless of income or experience, can duplicate a successful system for creating a profitable ebook business. So when you're looking for a way to profit online, don't overlook this industry. As long as your price is reasonable and your information is sound, you can make money.

Author Patricia Spencer is creator of the popular ebook, "Blueprint to Massive Income." This step-by-step manual for setting up your own ebook business produces wonderful results in a short amount of time. Earn $500 to $1,000 per day!

Our Top Gas Saving Tips

By Luke Cameron

The price of gasoline increases everyday, and it doesn't stop. It continues to rise even as you read this article. However, there are gas saving tips that you can do to be able to save some money and maximize your use of gasoline.

Buy your gas first thing in the morning or late at night. Gas is denser at a cooler temperature. You will be getting more for your money when you stock up your gas in the morning or late at night than stocking up during the day.

Compare gas prices within your community and look for the one that offers the best value for your money. Here's a hint – you can check gas prices online. This way you will not need to drive out just to compare prices in your area. This will surely help you save some gas, too, right?

Keep your car well-maintained. Cars in top condition do not consume too much fuel. Tune your car regularly so that your fuel consumption will be reduced by 20 percent. Always check the condition of the tires, too. Make sure they are inflated and aligned properly. Under inflated tires will increase your fuel consumption by 6 percent. Another important parts of your car that need to be monitored are your oil and air filters. They need to be changed regularly in order to keep your car running smoothly. The overall health of your car greatly influences your gas consumption.

When driving, always stay within the speed limits. If you are driving too slowly, you will consume a lot more gas. If possible, you should sometimes use overdrive. This will help save fuel as well as improve the wear on your car engine. When you go out, make a list of all your errands so that you will be able to get all of them done in one go. Remember that you consume too much fuel if you keep on cold starting your car engine.

These are just a few gas saving tips that will help you save money and maximize your fuel stock. Gas prices are increasing to ridiculously high prices these days and of course, it is important to save money whenever you can.
