Hotelito Desconocido A Pacific Ocean Hideaway

By Kelly Wilson

The Hotelito Desconocido is beautifully situated on a remote coastal lagoon, miles away from anything, and quite unlike most beach resorts you will have ever seen.

The setting is spectacular, indeed breathtaking, if you look in either direction down the beach, you will see nothing but the Pacific Ocean, and the apparently endless beach.

The Hotelito Desconocido is in the middle of an ecological reserve, and this fact controls much of the hotel I am a creature of comforts, a 21st Century person, if I travel, then I must have a laptop, my hotel must have all the mod cons sort of person, but the Hotelito is the very opposite of what I normally crave. . If someone had said to me a couple of years ago that I'd happily pay US$500 for hotel accommodation that didn't have satelliteTV, never mind a TV at all or a telephone for that matter, then I would have laughed.

If they'd added there was no Internet or even electric lights, then I'd have become hysterical. As a last straw to be told there would be no minibar, never mind air conditioning, is just beyond a joke.

Then to be told I couldn't drink water from the taps would not have surprised me, but I definitely wouldn't have expected to need a rowing boat to get me to a beach, where as the final insult you can't swim because it is far too dangerous. Having said that it is a most beautiful beach, ranked I believe amongst the top 20 in the world. As a compensation there is a superb swimming pool.

I loved the Hotelito Desconocido because that was exactly the way it was.

Just imagine a beach situation as described, but add to that a veritable aviary of exotic birds, where you can see dolphins and whales from the beach, due to the extremely deep water a few yards from the shore.

I just love the sea turtle research station, how many people get the chance to help baby turtles return to the ocean.

Hotelito Desconocido A Pacific Ocean Hideaway

To hear the floor boards creak, and to hear the water splashing around beneath you, intermingled with the sounds of the birds, and behind it all, the roar of waves breaking, is to me the noise of long forgotten childhood, and is so utterly relaxing, you can't even if you wanted to think about the stresses you left behind.

Running up a flag each morning for coffee and biscuits just adds to the atmosphere, as does the locally sourced, and quite ethnic hand painted furniture. You really do feel immersed in proper Mexican culture.

If we add the stables and horse back riding on the beach, and night time when there are literally thousands of candles, both inside and outside, and torches giving the kind of light you can't explain or photograph, with a background of millions of stars in the huge sky.

Somehow the Hotelito Desconocido manages to just about get the balance right between being eco friendly and the extreme comfort demanded for the price tag. It is not luxurious, even Spartan, and there are the mosquitos, so take repellent.

The food is perhaps not all it might be, though very much locally sourced, but all in all the Hotelito Desconocido is a must for all lovers of Hideaway Hotels.

Why Is The Atlantic Ocean So Desirable?

By Hallidae Thomason

Well it might be wise to start this column off by stating that it comes with a bias. I love the Atlantic Ocean and I would not move away from it in a million years. My bias comes from the first 22 years of my life living on the beaches of Santa Barbara over on the west coast.

Not what you expected to hear I bet! Most people that grow up in California either stay there, right on the coast, or at least stay on the western side of the states where they can at least enjoy the mountains. I however have quite a different take, not an unpopular one either, especially after you are able to hear and to think about what you are able to hear and think about what you are about to read and ponder in the following paragraphs about the wonders of the Atlantic Ocean.

Growing up on the west coast was great don't get me wrong but there were certainly things that tainted the beautiful serenity of the Pacific ocean for me that are not associated with the Atlantic ocean in my mind.

Number one thing would be the drugs. Basically in California if you weren't a weirdo you were high on some chemical that made you forget about the high cost of living that you had to deal with and the constant threat of earthquakes ever lurking on the horizon of my anxiety. The mixture of these more than average stressors drove me to cocaine and heroin, which was everywhere you turned in sunny California and especially on the beaches. I'm sickened to think about the dragnet that this was for me and a lot of other folks who wasted their chance at a productive start on the shores of an ocean that was not the Atlantic Ocean.

The other main thing I love about the Atlantic Ocean is the relative lack of surfing, a sport I once loved but now detest. I lost my love to the jaws of a viscous Pacific Ocean shark as she was paddling out on a large wave day you see, and have renounced the sport that took so much from me. Its not that the east coast waters don't have sharks its just that they are colder and less enjoyable to surf in (less waves.)

So overall it isn't a love of the Atlantic Ocean for me so much as it is a hatred for the Pacific Ocean that haunts me with all of the deepest recesses of my life that I want to recover from and forget about. Maybe this way I will be able to fall asleep at night without valium.
