How Discount Airlines Save Money

By Sintilia Miecevole

In the last twenty years, discount airlines have single-handedly changed the way the airline industry functions. With a focus on getting customers to their desired destinations without the frills of regular airline travel, discount airlines can charge lower prices and still meet strict safety codes. Airlines like JetBlue and Southwest offer customers extremely low rates and still service a wide variety of popular domestic destinations.

In the past, discount airlines saved money by skimping on the unneeded details. For instance, instead of receiving a full dinner, you might just get a drink and a small bag of peanuts. Rather than offering movies on long flights, you would have to find ways to entertain yourself, and legroom was much less of a concern than it was for major airlines. However, these days, discount airlines are investing more in entertainment systems, and they are paying more attention to customer comfort.

This is partly because major airlines are finding that they must lower their rates to compete with discount prices. Because customers can often find the same rates from regular airlines, discount companies are finding that they must keep up with the comfort level. Otherwise, customers will always choose the major airline if they can find a comparable ticket price. By searching online discount ticket retailers like Hotwire and Priceline, customers can often find cheap tickets on both discount and regular airline flights.

If your planned destination is a sunny vacation town, discount airlines are usually still significantly cheaper than traditional companies. Many of the discount airlines focus their flights on destinations with agreeable climates. This gives them the corner on the vacation travel market, and it helps them save money by having to deal less with bad weather and the delays and maintenance costs associated with colder climates.

There are also many discount airlines that specialize in cross-country flights. Many of these companies make the bulk of their profits by flying just a few specific routes. However, because regular airlines do not want to lose the profitable business of cross-country travelers, they have begun to match discount prices, making this sort of travel a win-win situation for the customer.

How Discount Airlines Save Money

When you are planning a trip and researching prices, the more flexibility you have in your destinations, the more you can save. Many discount airlines only fly to certain cities, and you can literally save hundreds of dollars by flying into an airport merely an hour away from your final destination. For instance, if you are traveling to Austin, TX, a relatively small airport, you will have to pay a much greater ticket price than you would if you flew a discount airline to San Antonio and drove the hour and a half to Austin.

There are also some discount airlines that work in reverse. They service smaller airports where fees are much less, and they avoid larger airports altogether. It may be worth it to slightly alter your plans and fly into a smaller city and drive to your final destination. Also, the benefits of a hassle-free flight into a small airport are much greater than just getting a lower rate. By choosing a smaller airport, you can avoid the stress of parking and finding your way around, and you can get a great ticket price to boot!

No matter where you are going, discount airlines can almost always save you money. Be sure to comparison shop before booking your next flight, and you may find that you can save hundreds of dollars by simply checking a few different airlines and a few different airports. With a little research, you can spend less on getting to your destination and arrive with more cash to enjoy yourself with once you are there.

The Ins And Outs Of Finding Discount Flights Online

By Frank Johnson

Discount flights to destinations all over the world are available and can save you a significant amount of money on your trip; but how and where do you find discounted travel deals? They just don't fall out of the sky into your lap. And we all know the airlines aren't giving discounts out like candy on Halloween. In fact, often when you try to book a flight, months in advance, directly through the airlines or a travel agent, the price to fly is still costly. So, where can we find discount flights for our vacations, business trips, and weekend getaways? The answer is the Internet.

How Discount Airlines Save Money

Discount Flights on the Internet

How to Find Discount Flights

Unfortunately, cheap travel tickets don't just fall out of the sky. They need to be found. And too often, discount flights and cheap tickets are not easy to find on your own. That's where online travel sites come into play. Online travel sites often use airfare search engine technology to scour the web and their personal databases to find cheap airfare deals that match your itinerary. The technology these airfare search engines use is often proprietary and quite complicated and involved, but without them, the ability to find discount flights for your trip would be lessened. Online travel agents and agencies often build this technology into their website, allowing visitors to utilize their airfare search engine and find discount flights to wherever it is they want to travel.

But airfare search engines are only part of the equation to find discount flights. Some online travel sites are actually airfare consolidators. Airfare consolidators are businesses that purchase tickets directly from the airlines in bulk or carry a contract with the airlines so that they can get significant discounts on airfare and pass the savings on to you. However, not all consolidators make their travel deals available to the general public. Instead, some only sell discount tickets to travel agents and agencies.

Find Discount Flights and Save Money...and Your Sanity

The Internet has made it much easier for travelers to save on their flights. Using the latest technology and dealing directly with airlines, online travel sites find the best deals on airfare and pass on those savings directly to travelers. Without the Internet, finding discount flights and travel deals would be like finding a needle in a hay stack.
