Know More About Engagement Rings

By Robert Thatcher

A man's proposal to a woman would never be complete without an engagement ring. Engagement rings have been part of the tradition of countries all over the world. Engagement rings symbolize love and commitment to the person given with it.

All engagement rings come with diamonds from various sizes and no other stone can be placed with it. It has been interpreted that the round and never ending shape of the ring symbolizes the never-ending love and devotion to a woman. It is also a sign of offering ones commitment to the other person.

There are many types of engagement rings that are sold in the market. However, there are things that need to be considered before buying one like the type of ring, the diamond, the trends that are in the market and even the value. When choosing an engagement ring, these are the things that buyers need to check on.

The diamond of the engagement ring should be considered before all things. There are four areas to look for in a good diamond. They are the cut, clarity, color and carat.

When the cut is considered, it simply means the number of angles that are in the diamond including their proportions. The cut gives luster to the diamond. The fire or the shine of the diamond will depend on how many cuts are in it. The more cuts in the diamond, the more costly it becomes.

Diamonds are colored yellow in nature. The colorless ones are considered to be the most expensive and the most sought for diamonds. These colorless diamonds are very rare, which is why they are priced higher than the yellow ones. When considering an engagement ring, it is better to choose one that has a colorless diamond.

Clarity of diamonds refers to the impurities that are in them. These impurities resulted from pressure, heat, and rock sedimentation for over thousands of years. Clarity of a diamond could not be judged using the naked eyes. However, those diamonds that are priced higher are considerably high in clarity.

Buying A Cheap Diamond Engagement Ring

By Low Jeremy

Face the facts. If you are looking for a cheap diamond engagement ring, better be prepared to find a not that cheap diamond engagement ring. Engagement rings are expensive as it is and wanting one with a diamond on it is enough to dry up anyone's pockets.

Still, if you are really that determined to buy one in such a limited budget, here are some tips that may help you in your search. These may not of course guarantee success but at least you will not be getting any headaches while you scour the metropolis.

Set a realistic budget.

As mentioned before, diamond engagement rings are pretty costly. Finding one that is dirt cheap will be next to impossible. Save yourself a lot of headache by setting a budget that would actually allow you to buy a diamond engagement ring.

To do this, try looking at the prices in jewelry stores, both upscale and those that are in the mid-range. Ask about the specifics such as the carat, the color and the clarity. Compare prices and then decide just how much is the cheapest one. When you have already determined that, try looking at what you have saved up. Is it enough?

Thrift stores

There are stores that specialize in selling second-hand stuff. Try looking at these stores and find out if they are selling used diamond engagement rings. You can also try joining garage sales or estate sales. Here you will find great stuff. Who knows, you might even come across antique engagement rings that you or the person you'll be giving it to will love.

Surf the Internet

There are also online stores that sell diamond engagement rings. Some are brand new while some are already used. You can also try eBay and see if their price range is within your budget. Be careful though as some items are up for bid and you may end up paying more than what you have in your budget.

Try other gemstones

Although diamond engagement rings are really great, if you really cannot afford it, why waste the effort. Engagement rings set with other precious stones will also look great on the fingers of your loved one. Sapphires, amethyst, topaz and even rubies make great engagement rings. One thing that you can also do is to match the color of her eye with the gemstone. You can also buy multiple colored gemstones, even with a small diamond on it. This is less expensive.
