Lawn Care FAQ

By Michele Oberton

Q: How often should I cut my lawn? A: As part of quality lawn care, regular cutting with a mower should be observed and the grass should be cut to an even height. Cutting your lawn once per week should be sufficient.

Q: What is the purpose of raking my lawn? A: This is commonly done in order to remove dead grass. Many people only rake their lawn in the fall as the leaves begin to cover their yard, but a part of effective lawn care requires that lawns be raked during other seasons as well.

Q: Does lawn care require that I water my lawn? A: Not everyone does this, but it is recommended that lawns be watered in order to avoid having the grass to dry up and turn brown. If this happens, you could be left with brown spots in your yard.

Q: I have a dog and he is reeking havoc on the yard. How can I replant my lawn with success? A: Dogs and lawn care are not the best match, but they can work together. When you replant your lawn, consider using seeds that are specifically designed for high traffic areas. Other factors that may worsen the effect that your dog is having on the lawn may include a chain dragging the grass and exposing the dirt surface below or if your dog is prone to digging.

Q: Should I use harsh chemicals on my lawn in order to rid it of pests and insects? A: Many experts agree that this is a bad idea for several reasons. If you have children who play in the yard, this may be unhealthy for them. The same is true of pets, who make it a habit of digging or even eating grass at times. In addition, harsh chemicals often do more harm than good to your lawn and are certainly no friend of the environment. Instead, try a bug light or other means of ridding your lawn of insects and other pests.

Lawn care is a very big industry, which services millions of people every year. Whether you do not have the time to care for the lawn yourself or simply aren't up to the task, there are a number of landscaping experts that are readily available to help with lawn care needs. These are commonly found in the yellow pages under 'Landscaping' and most businesses can provide you with an instant quote over the telephone if you have detailed information regarding your specific lawn care needs.

Lawn Care Service

By Barbara Williams

Most homeowners would love to have a really great lawn. The reality is that as much as we may dream of having the prettiest property in the neighbourhood, few of us have the time or knowledge required to dedicate to proper lawn maintenance. It takes a certain amount of gardening knowledge and skill to make a lawn really thrive. Professional lawn care services offer the perfect solution.

Residential lawns make up about seventy percent of the millions of acres of American soil. As a result, the number of lawn care companies is steadily rising to meet the growing demands of homeowners. If you're not sure whether you require the services of a lawn care professional, consider the following points:

Time is Money Consider how much your time is worth. Lawn care service companies will provide you with the convenience of maintaining an attractive lawn, without sacrificing your busy lifestyle.

Expert Service Leave the job to an expert. Educated and experienced lawn care service providers have an understanding of how plants grow, and what is required to create and maintain an attractive lawn. Simply put, the professionals know more about lawn care than you do.

Make it Easy Lawn care service providers simplify the confusing task of choosing the best fertilizers or pesticides for your lawn. Instead of trying to make all of the decisions, delegate the task to professional lawn care service providers who can make educated choices for you.

Application While choosing the appropriate pesticides or fertilizers can be confusing, applying them can be an even more daunting task. Lawn care service providers save you the time-consuming task of calibrating spreaders and sprayers to accurately apply the products. Additionally, it eliminates the liability for proper storage of fertilizers and pesticides. Your professional lawn care service provider should ensure that these are stored in a locked, ventilated, waterproof area, thus reducing risks of seepage or the waste of expensive lawn care products.

Environmentally Friendlier Any application of chemical pesticides or fertilizers can pose a risk to our environment. Many homeowners are too inexperienced to safely apply these chemical treatments to their lawns. Leave the task to the experts, and spare yourself the trouble and risk.

Not every homeowner requires a lawn care professional for property maintenance. If you're not sure whether a professional service is right for you, ask yourself these questions:

Lawn Care FAQ

* Do I consider lawn care service to be expensive? * Do I enjoy working on my lawn? * Will the lawn care provider's busy production schedule allow for perfectly timed application or services?

If you decide to hire the services of a professional, be sure that the lawn care provider offers dependable service before you sign the contract. Most lawn care services are small businesses, and rely on word of mouth advertising. It's important to know whether the company you consider is in good standing with their clients. Ask friends and neighbors who they would refer, and determine if your lawn care service is from a reputable company before you make your final decision.
