Learning To Find The Best Available Wireless Plans

By Patricia Miller

There are numerous wireless telephone plans to pick from today. How do you choose the best wireless plan for you? Depending on where you live, you could have as many as five or more providers that offer services in your area, and each one has a variety of plans for you to consider according to your needs and estimated usage. It is very important that you do your homework before visiting a wireless store so you know exactly what you need from them. Let's explore the things that you need to consider.

It is vitally important that you know how much local, regional, and national coverage you estimate you are going to need in your wireless plan. If you travel extensively outside of your region, you will probably need to consider one of the nationwide plans in order to be covered. Once you decide on the coverage you need, you need to think about the number of minutes you could expect to use each month. By looking over previous bills or prepaid phone card receipts you should be able to work this out fairly easily to find the best wireless plans.

The type of phone that would best suit your needs is usually determined by the options you want to include. If you are planning on using the phone to send and receive email, then you will need one of the higher-end phones that is Internet ready and also comes with a plan that offers economy rates for data transmission. If Internet usage is not required, then you can get all the features you need in a phone that is much less expensive.

Oftentimes, there is a decrease in the cost of the phone with the purchase of a plan. In general, the best wireless plans are either a one-year or a two-year contract. Before you sign a contract, be sure you have a clear understanding of the terms of contract termination. If you must move your coverage area or otherwise break your contract, there can be a sizeable penalty which can, at times, be equal to the monthly repayment multiplied by the number of months remaining on the contract. It is very important that you know and understand every part of the contract before you sign it and are aware of any exit clauses that may be included.

Pre-Paid Wireless Plans End Outrageous Bills

By John Miller

One of the latest crazes from cell phone service providers is the pre-paid wireless plan. This type of plan offers many benefits that are normally unavailable from a standard cell phone plan. Pre-paid wireless plans represent a flexibility that many people crave. On the flip side of the coin, pre-paid wireless plans often do not have the same perks a long-term contract will yield with a service provider.

Of course there is a good side to pre-paid cell phone service. In many cases cards are offered by cell phone service providers that are then used to buy airtime. The great advantage to these cards is that a customer can always purchase additional cards at the same price when more minutes are needed. You never have to worry about overage charges if you run out of minutes, or whether or not you're killing your peak minutes or not.

It is, however, important to regularly purchase new minutes when using a pre-paid wireless plan. Often the service providers require customers to repurchase your minutes at regular intervals. For example, a customer may be required to purchase new minutes every month, every two months, or every year. The exact schedule will depend on the plan and provider.

Another great advantage to pre-paid wireless plans is that many of the phones used with these plans will keep track of the plans elapsed minutes. Sometimes they have a display of the exact number of airtime minutes left on the current card. It may even display exactly the next new minute purchase should be made and how much these minutes will cost.

This type of wireless plan is great for people on the go. If being tied down by long-term contracts is unappealing, a pre-paid wireless plan is often the best choice. Additionally, the fact that credit checks aren't necessary for these plans is a plus for customers who have had credit problems.
