Looking for Dish Network? Not All Dealers Are Created Equal

By Mark Larsen

Good News! Have you ever noticed that all of the Dish Network dealers have just about the same offers and prices? So what's the good news?

All of these retailers are fighting for your business. In order to compete, they have to have better customer service and keep their prices as low as everyone else.

In a nutshell...for the companies that are able to stand the test of time, their quality of service goes up and the prices remain the lowest possible!

So, knowing this does it matter which one you order your Dish from?

Answer: You bet it does!

Be Careful! Although Dish Network has strict standards for their retailers, many fledging "companies" are seeing dollar signs floating around this hot product and are jumping in with both feet. Many do not have much experience in the industry which can mean a headache for the unsuspecting consumer.

The Satellite TV industry is Booming! Tens of Thousands of satellite systems are being sold every month, which means a small company starting out, even with the best of intentions may not be able to deliver the quality or quantity of service (for both the installation and ongoing customer and technical support) that a more established company will be able to deliver.

With this exploding market in mind, be aware that there could be some scammers out there that are not at all connected with Dish Network and will take your money and run, just as there are scammers in just about any industry.

When choosing a company to order your Dish Network system from, it is wise to put high priority on the stability and long standing reputation of the company. Especially since there are so many "here today and gone tomorrow" companies out there that just do not have the endurance or experience to meet the challenges of such a fast moving market.

On the bright side, when you do find a good well established company to order your system from, you can rest-at-ease knowing that you are in the hands of someone with enough savvy and sense of service to make your switch to Dish Network a smooth and pleasant experience.

Dish Network Smart Card

By Frank Johnson

In researching Dish Network as a satellite TV provider, you may have asked yourself...

Just what is the Dish Network Smart Card?

In an effort to combat signal piracy, satellite providers have faced quite a challenge: keep their broadcasting secure from unauthorized users while providing uninterrupted service to their base of subscribers.

For Dish Network, the result is the Smart Card.

In the past, Dish Network satellite receivers used a blue access card to assist with activation and programming setup. Those old blue cards have been replaced by new, yellow smart cards. And quite smart they are.

Already popular in European applications, the Smart Card is now starting to take off in the States as well. Used in credit cards, wireless communications and sensitive personnel identification, the Smart Card is becoming more prevalent as our dependence on technology grows.

The Dish Network Card is similar to the size and shape of a credit card. But that's where the similarities end. Unlike the magnetic strip on your credit card, the Dish Network Smart Card has a microprocessor inside. Where magnetic strips can be easily damaged, erased or worse, read, the microprocessor is much harder to crack, keeping sensitive information secure from prying eyes. The card reader in your satellite receiver actually talks to the microprocessor to determine what programming access you should have and make sure that programming is delivered to you on schedule. It also checks to see that the programming you're receiving is done through the receiver you purchased. This prevents any signal theft in the event your Smart Card is lost or stolen.

Another interesting feature of the new Dish Network Card is that it improves Dish Network's ability to manage your account through more accurate billing. The microprocessor keeps up with any premium programming you might purchase so you're only billed for what you actually watched.

To protect your Dish Network Card, keep it away from magnets and static electricity. The Smart Card should be inserted gently into the receiver ensuring the card is correctly positioned and free of any foreign materials.
