A new type of eCard simulates science news webpage

Recently a piece of news is widely spread on internet. It announces that NASA scientists have found mysterious characters on the rock of Titan and it might be the sign of civilization having existed on the planet. Bob Rowntree received this URL link (http://www.uuswap.com/ecard_titan.php) from her girl friend on MSN this morning. When he felt suspicious about the trueness of the source, with an accidental click on the picture, Dave saw his name and a josh message!

This page has a headline "Sign of civilization discovered on Titan!" with the news category "Science". A set of space pictures are located adjacent serving as a foil. The underside picture shows NASA scientists gather themselves together discussing excitedly, which helps enhance the suspense.

Go to the bottom of this page, it comes to your sense that the whole thing is a friendly joke. You can fill in the form; write down wishing message and forward to your friends with a surprise!

Many receivers are satisfied at the effect and feel it an exceptional way to send greeting to friends.

Time to Upgrade Your Friends?

Time to Upgrade Your Friends? by Myrtis Smith

There is a saying that goes something like this: The person you are today is a direct by-product of the books you read and the people you hang out with. If you are not where you want to be in life, it might be time to upgrade your friends. Take this simple quiz to see"

Make a wish on Titan and send it to your friends

1. Are your friends generally on time for get-togethers?
2. Are any of your friends on the road to financial independence?
3. Do you have any friends who own their own business (or have aspirations to do so)?
4. Would you ever consider trading lives with any of your friends?
5. Are your friends "happy"?
6. Do any of your friends have clear goals they are working towards?

If you answered "no" to most of those questions, the time has come to stop hanging out with people who have less going for them than you do. Think about your goals, dreams and aspirations; make new friends who can support you in those. If you have plans to own your own business, befriend a business owner. If you dream of financial independence, find some like-minded individuals to add to your circle.

No one says you have to ditch our old friends, just make room for the new ones.
