Memories of an old porch swing

By Rick Rouse

Memories of an old porch swing by Rick Rouse

An old porch swing has a unique charm, providing an abundance of relaxing, down-home country atmosphere regardless of where one happens to live. Some of my fondest memories revolve around the old, worn swing that used to adorn the front porch of my childhood home.

I vividly remember my mom sitting in that old porch swing as twilight settled in, carefully watching over us kids as we scampered around the yard chasing "lighting bugs" and listening to our own squeals of delight several times as they echoed back and forth between the hills and down the "holler".

With eight kids to feed (and often a friend or two), she would usually be breaking beans, shelling peas, shucking corn, or preparing some other vegetables that she had picked from the garden earlier in the day. And of course she would be humming one of her favorite old hymns.

I also remember how my dad would sit in that same old swing on a lazy Sunday afternoon, enjoying the cool breeze while strumming his guitar and singing a country or gospel tune. He could play with the best of them, but only for his and our personal enjoyment, not money, even though he easily could have.

And I'll never forget those hot, muggy summer nights when it was simply too uncomfortable to stay inside. Even after so many years have come and gone, I can still recall sitting in that old swing, listening to the country sounds of the bullfrogs from the nearby creek joining in an evening chorus with the crickets and whippoorwills.

Mom's abundant love, a cold slice of juicy watermelon, and that old porch swing were the foundation upon which my favorite memories were built.

I've often heard it said that the best part of life still lies ahead, and I believe it's true, but the memories of my boyhood and how it revolved around that squeaky old porch swing will remain with me always!

Porch Swings: Find The Right One For You

By Jesse Akre

If you had to choose one piece of outdoor furniture to represent the ambiance of American history, which would it be? For most people, the answer to that question would be the porch swing. Porch swings have been a part of history for more than a hundred years and from the way things look, porch swings will be a part of our heritage for at least a hundred more.

Whether you want to chat with friends, enjoy a relaxing cup of iced tea or just enjoy the fresh air outside, porch swings offer the perfect place to do it. It's no wonder so many people like porch swings. In fact, porch swings are so popular, people who don't even have porches have started buying them and are putting them in backyards and on patios.

Whether you want a porch swing that is suspended from the ceiling of your porch or one that hangs from an arbor or frame, there are numerous porch swings to suit your needs. Some people even enjoy hanging porch swings from trees. It's all a matter of personal tastes and the resources of the space you have available.

Porch swings come in a variety of woods, colors, sizes and styles. Single people and couples tend to do well with porch swings that seat two. Families, on the other hand, often prefer the larger porch swings that can accommodate a number of people.

The prices of porch swings vary. Exactly how much you pay for a porch swing will depend on the size of the porch swing, what the porch swing was crafted from, the style of the swing and where you buy it. Typically, porch swings start at about two-hundred dollars and go up from there with some porch swings exceeding the thousand-dollar mark. However, the investment in a porch swing is well worth the years of enjoyment porch swing owners experience.
