Mizuno Golf Clubs reviewed

By John Woods

Using a variety of Mizuno golf clubs, especially the Mizuno putter, we had a bit of a hard time feeling contact, and feeling contact with the golf ball is everything in golf. Whether you're hitting an approach shot, driving, putting, or working your way out of a bunker, the need to feel the club face directly hit the ball is everything. This helps you determine what is going wrong with the shot.

The first time I used a Mizuno T P Mills putter for example, it got to the point where I dreaded the putt when approaching the green. Normally you can watch the ball hit the face of a putter and know whether the shot has at least a chance of going in or not, but not in this case.

And that was the biggest problem...the Mizuno putter transferred no feeling from the face of the club to my hands. This means that you'll have a difficult time developing a solid stroke with it. The best way to describe it is to compare it to the old putters you might find at miniature golf places. It tends to make every putt feel like you're pushing around one of those concrete balls.

The design features of the Mizuno putters however, are outstanding. Like the Mizuno drivers, these golf clubs are lightweight and nicely balanced. Practice swings feel good and it's easy to keep the head of the putter from overly opening or closing during the putt. But even though the design is nice, this club affected our scores by adding 5 or 6 strokes due to all the missed putts.

So if you are thinking of buying one of these Mizuno putters, ask your local pro if you can try it for a round or two to see if you like it. If you're not able to try it first, our recommendation would be to pass on the Mizuno putter, BUT give some serious consideration to some of the other Mizuno golf clubs, like the Mizuno graphite driver and the Mizuno Utility Woods. They got the job done very nicely.

Best golfing success,

Finding Custom Golf Clubs For You

By Luke Cameron

Golf clubs are indeed very important equipment. If you don't have clubs, how can you play? However, there are some people who are not choosy when it comes to using the correct golf clubs. Sometimes they complain about getting bad backs or body ache after a sub par game. Sometimes they are not even playing to their full capacity because of an ill-fitting golf club.

Yes, you read that right. Golf clubs also need to "fit" the golfer. Professional golfers use custom clubs. Does that mean you have to spend hundreds or thousands of dollars to have custom clubs? Definitely not! There are ways around it. You can find the perfect set of golf clubs for you without spending too much. You only need to know a few things to be able to find the one that suits you and your game perfectly.

The length of the club is a major consideration when buying a golf club. However, the pros are much more concerned about the size of the golf club's grip. This is because the grip should be comfortable for the player's hands. There are some clubs that are made for women, and the grips of these clubs are smaller.

If you would really want to get a set of custom clubs, then by all means go for it! However, you should keep in mind that a process is involved in making custom golf clubs. You have to go through a fitting session when you decided to purchase a custom set of clubs. The fitting sessions does not only take your body measures! You stance, grip and swing are also taken into account.

Most of the time, people who are taller or shorter than most golfers really need to have custom golf clubs. This is a must if you are a pro. You have to consider the time and energy spent on bad grips, bad swings and overall bad playing just because your club is giving you a hard time.

What about "off the shelf" golf clubs? Well, these clubs may be satisfactory, but they will not exactly let you play to your fullest potential.

If you are a serious golfer then you really need to consider getting yourself fitted for a custom set. Just weigh the pros and the cons. I am very sure that if you have enough to spend for an extra "off the shelf" golf club set, well, you would rather get a custom golf club set that will help you play golf to your maximum level.
