Literally thousands of people venture out into the world of online business every week. These businesses come in many shapes and sizes, but they all have one thing in common: failure rates.

A whopping 90% of all would-be online money-makers never do make a profit. They invest their time, their creativity, and worst of all, their hard-earned money in business ventures and opportunities that never make them a single cent. Perhaps the most discouraging part about all this is that these people don't even know why they are failing.

Let me tell you a little-known secret that everyone needs to know. The reason why 90% of us aren't making any money, despite all our hard work, is that we just aren't cut out for marketing. It's not our fault, and it's not because we're not smart or don't work hard enough. You see, we've been told all along that ANYONE can succeed online, and then we expect that to be true. In reality, however, real marketers are a rare breed... a breed who possesses the gift of persuasion, snappy writing, and basically talking people out of their money. These people are few and far between, which is why successful salespeople are among the highest paid on earth.

So, what can you do to become one of these rare specimens? Sadly, nothing. Can you learn to become a successful marketer? Probably not. Unless you naturally possess the "marketing gene," and have the best luck in the world, you probably won't find real success online as long as you're trying to do the marketing yourself.

Now, what I just said is the key: "as long as you're trying to do the marketing yourself." There are plenty of marketing experts out there, real gurus, who know what they're doing and THRIVE on it. Why not elicit their help?

If you think you can't afford to hire an expert, you're wrong. After all, if they're going to help you make money, you'll already be one step ahead of where you are. Many of them are looking to team up with people just like you, because they know they stand to make money if they help you out. They love what they do, and they need you just as much as you need them. Many have set up networks where they partner with you, automate your campaign, and simply take a commission of everyone else that signs up. It's simple, and it works.

Why not simplify things for yourself AND make a profit? For more information about automating YOUR marketing efforts, contact info@thegideonnetwork.com or see <http://www.linkcounter.com/go.php?linkid=160187> by Stefan Everaet <http://www.linkcounter.com/go.php?linkid=160187>

Relieving Dry Skin And Winter Itch

By Jason Flintstone

The winter air can leave a chill in the air and on our skin that chaps and chafes our skin. And, the additional heat, can warm our hearts and our home, but dry out the air and again, our skin, leaving it dehydrated and dry. And, in both cases we can experience a common condition known as winter itch.

According to experts dry skin is a direct by-product of a loss of moisture. They note, that depending on which layer (dermis or epidermis) the water content of the skin can vary, but is estimated at 80% for the epidermis, but much drier for the dermis, or surface layer of skin. In fact, according to the experts the dermis is comprised of dead skin cells and has a water content of about 10–30 percent.

When the outer layer, the stratum corneum dries out, it loses its luster and results in dry skin. And, skin that is low on water and dry will fissure, making it more susceptible to bacterial and fungal infections.

Moisturizers can help rehydrate the skin preventing further water loss and dryness. While some may result in skin swelling slightly re ducting fine line and wrinkles and making pores appear smaller, they do not repair sun damage. However, they can also help skin feel softer and smoother. And experts notes the four target areas moisturizers generally address.

1. Skin barrier repairs 2. Increasing water content 3. Diminishing amount of water loss 4. Restoring skin's capacity to attract, hold and redistribute water.

And, experts offer the following suggestions for dealing with dry skin and winter itch.

- Refrain from hot tubs and hot baths. While the heat may feel soothing, it's actually serves to strip your skin of essential oils and depletes it of water, making skin drier and matters worse.
- Lather you ligaments while still wet. Applying moisturizer to damp skin helps seal in the moisture.
- Creamy, rich moisturizers are the best kind. Consider putting some petroleum jelly on your hands covered with cotton gloves while you sleep at night to keep hands supple and smooth.
- Note that moisturizers containing lactic acid or urea can draw water into the skin.
- Moisturize hands after each washing or when coming in from the cold.
