Not The Destination But The Journey

Not The Destination But The Journey by Jim henderson

We remember inventors, explorers, and entrepreneurs by their successes instead of by their persistence in the face of uncertainty. The common elements that unite these groups is their willingness to take calculated risks and the perseverance to persist in spite of seeming failure. None of them went into any endeavor with the intent to fail but neither was success guaranteed. They knew the risks and were not deterred, ultimately they succeeded one more time than they failed. In our haste to obtain success can we afford to overlook the process that brought it about.

Today, we attempt to isolate ourselves from risk as much as possible while looking with distrust toward those who are willing to leave the refuge of certitude for an uncertain reward. From the vantage point of the past tense, we conveniently forget that those who altered our history, left their impact on industry, and shaped our culture did not foreknow the outcome of their actions.

Would history remember men like Marco Polo, Columbus, or Lewis and Clark if they had not dared to venture into the unknown. Whether pilgrim or pioneer, it was unnamed common people who risked everything to better themselves. Civilization followed the trails they blazed. What of the inventors like Alexander Graham Bell, the Wright brothers, and Thomas Edison who succeeded where others failed because they refused to qui? In the political realm, can we ignore men like Abraham Lincoln who overcame a string of failures to become president or Winston Churchill whose perseverance gave a beleaguered Engalnd the will to outlast the destruction of a dictator's war machine? What of the entrepreneurs, both the infamous and the ignonimous, who made their fortunes through risk and then risked their fortunes again in order to increase them? Massive corporations were birthed into existence through the travail of those individuals who nurtured them through their humble beginnings. In every case, success was the indirect result of the persistence of individuals willing to take necessary risks.

By focusing only on obvious success and overlooking the process that included apparent failure we succumb to an unrealistic expectation that we are supposed to succeed without setback.

Perhaps then the destination is not as important as the journey.

Vision – The foundation of success

Vision – The foundation of success by Harish Dhingra

If success is a destination then vision is a guide for giving us the direction.

It would be great if someone could pluck the vision from a tree, but unfortunately this is not the reality. Here we have to be the creator of it.

Vision is like a child, who grows with the time. It depends on you how fast it grows. You have to water it with your imagination and cherish it in your brain till you get success from it.

It comes in small ideas which are very difficult to care and every idea contains a slogan on it, Handle With Care. It means that it may get affected with the environment, you are in. To enrich your vision, you have to work on it and you have to put your best.

You should try to make your vision like a sandal tree which does not get affected with snakes.

Wish you happy journey for this beautiful destination called success. Success is all yours :)
