PR Trump Style

By Susan Harrow

PR Trump Style by Susan Harrow

If anyone knows how to toot his own horn it's Donald Trump. How does he get away with it? How can you follow in the footsteps of his success?

1. Balance Your Bragging with Boyishness.

Sure, Trump is a loud mouth, but he's also self-deprecating, making fun of his hair, his bimbos, and his appetites. He let's you know that he knows he's being a braggart, but it's all in good fun. You can do the same by making light of your foibles while touting your achievements.

2. Coin a phrase.

How many times had we heard the words You're fired? before Trump used it in The Apprentice Boardroom? Trump made the phrase new by using it in a surprising way. Once he discovered its effectiveness he made it his trademark. He's fair, but tough. He walks his talk by making instant decisions, then pointing that fat finger at one of the unsuspecting apprentice hopefuls and uttering the feared phrase. Is there an age old phrase you can make yours by some unique gesture or by using it in a surprising circumstance? Phrases are all a part of branding. Find a few that suit you.

3. Do Something Outrageous.

The public loves a daredevil—be it with words or actions. Trump lives large. He jets around in big planes. He owns big places. He has lovers with big bosoms. He has big hair. While bigger isn't necessarily better, bigger gets noticed. It's not my style, but maybe it's yours.

Big comes with many faces. The public loves actions that take courage—or a lot of money. What impresses me isn't money, but the adventuresome spirit. Adventure filmmaker Scott Lindgren, who is considered one of the extreme sport's most prominent heroes, kayaked down the Tsango River in Tibet. Navigating down it was likened to snowboarding down Everest. Lindgren is devoted to doing treks in wild and challenging rivers in circumstances that haven't been done before. He's after a pure experience, and eschews publicity and moneymaking. The irony is that he gets both.

Ultimately, no matter how much publicity you want, it's letting go of the need for it that will take you to places that perhaps Trump or even Lindgren have not gone.

Donald Trump, True Leader, True Business Man

By Rob Scribner

Through the years we have watched Donald Trump Rise and Fall, only to rise again. A man that truly understandings the ups and downs of business. It is believed that a good business man must be humbled a few time before greatness. This is the only way a good leader can be developed. A business person must know what they have to lose.

Donald Trump is a amazing person. His true leadership shows in his approach to his employees. He does not judge them for their education, but by their performance and ability to lead. Not all great leaders can have degrees. Street smarts and business experience can crush a college educated person.

Here are a few items we would like to point out about Donald Trump: – A person that knows success and tells us to brag about. Blow your own horn.

- Do not judge a person by their education, but always respect those who have one.
- Learn to make the deal, buy knowing what you want and how your going to get there.
- Surround yourself with great people.

Business Subjects That Donald Trump Would Be A Great Influence: – Master of great real estate deals.

- Marketing, What your doing and what you have already done
- Leadership and People Skills, Respect those around you, yet everyone one knows who is in charge.

Donald Trump has proven to be a household name to us for his accomplishments. Many folks down play his forwardness and horn blowing ways, but he always seems to be on top. Mr. Trump is someone to watch, learn and understand.
