Parenthood And Long Hair

By Stephanie Foster

If they don't cut their hair in pregnancy, many women cut their hair shorter after the baby is born.

The reason, as always, is that it's easier to deal with.

If you think about it, though, long hair may not require that much extra effort when compared to short hair. You'll spend less time getting it cut at the salon, which can be nice when you have to fit that in around your children's schedules. Brushing your hair only takes a little longer for well-maintained long hair than it does for shorter hair.

Pulling the hair back in a ponytail is easy and practical for any hair that is long enough for that style. I've always been fond of braiding my hair when I need a lot of control.

Children love long hair. My daughter is always asking me to brush her hair long, "like Rapunzel's." My kids would be shocked if I cut my hair.

But what about those hectic days when you have a hard time even getting into the shower? Isn't long hair inconvenient then?

It doesn't have to be. Twist your hair up into a knot if you don't absolutely have to brush it and you won't have to wait for it to dry. My hair needs washing only about every other day before I start to notice an oily feeling... occasionally daily in summer due to the heat, and sometimes I suspect I could get away with washing it less in winter if I were in THAT much of a hurry. It's just so nice to get out of the shower some days, feeling clean, but not needing to worry about drying my hair.

Moms do not have to have short hair. It's common practice these days, but it's nice to stand out in a way you won't regret later. I often get envious comments from other moms, and meeting other long haired moms is fun. No, we don't talk about having long hair all the time... occasionally share care or styling tips, but I think most women do that anyhow. It's just a little something we automatically know we have in common.

Parenthood And Long Hair

Keeping your hair long is also a great way to feel feminine. My husband and I knew each other for years before we married, but had lost contact for a time, during which I grew my hair out. His first comment on seeing me after 5 years apart, aside from general hellos was "I love your hair." I don't say that's the only reason we got back together, not by a long shot, but it sure didn't hurt. He'd be quite disappointed if I cut my hair. Few men can resist long hair. When you're a parent and sometimes there aren't many ways to show your feelings, little things like teasing him with long hair works quite nicely.

it's time to cut her hair short. She isn't really that obsessed with having long hair, but does think it's fun.

Ladies, show off your Hair with cute Hair accessories!

By Mike Yeager

Hair accessories offer an easy way of showing off your hair. Choose from a host of hair clips, scrunches, trendy scarves, bandanas and what have you. A well-chosen and well-coordinated hair accessory goes a long way in giving you and your hair a unique look. Hair accessories are almost a must-have in one's fashion repertoire. So much so, that some celebrities are even identified by their trademark hair accessories.

There is a hair accessory for every occasion.

There is a hair accessory for every occasion, need or situation. And we virtually have a barrage of "specialized" hair accessories. Take for example children's hair accessories which are designed for their special hair needs. Or for that matter, wedding hair accessories for that all-important event in your life, with different but coordinated hair accessories for the bridesmaids, the bridal party and a regal one for the all-important bride! Delve into a choice of tiaras, hair sticks, headpieces, halos and combs made from a wide variety of materials including pearl and crystal! Hair fashion has indeed come a long way! Bridal hair accessories come in the widest varieties, limited only by one's imagination. Yesterday's ponytail tied in ribbon are passé - today, headgear is in. To make that small but significant fashion statement!
