Psychics can't believe the growth in their popularity

Psychics can't believe the growth in their popularity by Elspeth Newman

Jenny pulled a card from her tarot card deck. "The Four of Swords — it's shown itself again," she said with a sigh. "I feel like there's a two-month period you're waiting for."

The beneficiary of Jenny's tarot reading, Samantha, had indeed just landed a temporary two-month job as an office manager in Sydney, to tide her over until University started.

Some may say that Jenny may have made a lucky guess, but more and more people are beginning to believe otherwise. In this unpredictable world, psychics are busier than ever.

Psychic readings are indeed changing said tarot reader Jenny. "I see more interest in long-range planning instead of love and 'will I live happily ever after?'"

Belief in the paranormal has also spread well beyond the small communities it use to be used in. A recent Gallup poll found that one in two Americans believes in extrasensory perception. Fifty-four percent believe in psychic or spiritual healing, and almost three in 10 say they believe in witches and the figures are higher for Australia.

"It's changing fast," says Jenny, a psychic reader for the Universal Psychic Guild, the largest of its type in the world. "We used to just get calls from a small circle of people who knew what we did and relied upon it, now its completely different. We have thousands of callers calling from all sorts of backgrounds and many many more professional people who are using our services to plan everything in their lives from business decisions to finding the right partner.

"We all knew that the world was becoming more spiritual, but none of us expected it to change so fast and for psychics to become so popular.

"I now have over 200 people I speak with on a weekly basis."

You can speak to Jenny and other psychics by logging onto The Universal Psychic Guild.

Have You Ever Had Your Palm Red? Online Psychic Readings Are As Easy As 1, 2, 3

By Paolo Basauri

Okay, I couldn't resist flashing back to childishness and old jokes, and I don't have any red paint on me at the moment. Nowadays, you don't need to leave your own home to have an online psychic reading of your future and like everything else, you will find it online. You can even train to be a psychic online because many psychics are offering to teach you how. They "provide clear information" about the latest psychical research with news from "trustworthy" official psychic organizations with the official bodies and federations, along with teaching about psychic abilities and offer to teach you how to do readings. There are classes, study courses, clairvoyance readings practice, just to name a few options. You can learn to read Tarot cards and different practices such as Mediumistic and Rune readings, along with listening to audio recordings of the New Age gurus. Some online psychics invite you to visit their chat rooms and be social with other psychics and meet new people.

There are true psyches around, and the good ones offer their services for the good of others. Many work for police departments looking for missing people or searching for bad people. True psychics are not out to clean you out and some do make a living out of telling people their futures. There are many though that are just complete thieves and those are the ones you need to look out for. They promote themselves as clairvoyants or psychics and claim they have powers that enable them to read a persons future, make contact with a dead loved one, or tell you who your going to marry. However, they are not psychics, they just have the ability to read people well and tell them what they want to hear, and all the while filling their pockets with peoples' hard earned money. Here are a few tips to help you see a fraud psychic.

- The most common method is "cold reading," this involves reading body language, and listening to your voice.
- Over confidence is a good warning, if they build themselves up to were they can do no wrong, watch out!
- Questions about your background. This is unnecessary, if a "psychic asks you where were you born, your parents religion, or even educational level, move on.
- Gaining your cooperation in advance. These "psychics" claim they need your full cooperation and if nothing happens, you weren't a "true believer."

Now, you are not able to see these things with online psychic reading, so you should be very careful when paying for online readings. Try not to take online psychic readings too seriously and use them for what they are there for, to have fun and to satisfy your curiosity about online psychics. Do you really want to know what your future holds for you? Wouldn't you rather be surprised about what exciting things the future holds for you and yours?
