Red flags when purchasing Designers Handbags from online auctions

Red flags when purchasing Designers Handbags from online auctions by Costas Pitas

Please Note: It is not our job to stop you or anyone that buys or sells fake LV. We just try to educate the consumer.

First of all remember that a handbag reflects your personality! That's why you need an authentic handbag that you will have forever and be proud of.

First thing you have to see when you are about to bid on a designer's handbag is: Does the auction states and guarantees that the handbag is authentic or full money back? If not, you should ask. Make sure you can get a full money back guarantee if the handbag is found to be fake. Authentic handbag sellers don't mind guaranteeing full money back if the handbag is found to be fake. They know their merchandise and they would not jeopardize their reputation to make $50 extra on a fake.

Be extremely cautious if the seller has no feedback. The lower the seller's feedback the greater the risk you are taking in purchasing from him/her. On the other hand, the higher the sellers' positive rating, the more likely you will at least get your money back if the item is found to be fake.

Does the seller offer multiples of the same and/or new items at a very low price? Does the offer sounds too good to be true? It might be. Some times the merchandise is counterfeit, but the pictures might reflect authentic merchandise. Check out how much are the other sellers are selling the specific model. Is the seller you are buying selling way too low? Be cautious.

Does the seller have hidden feedback? Some sellers hide their feedback after a negative feedback left from a bad transaction. Why the seller hides his/her feedback should make you think twice. The seller should have his/her feedback available for buyers to see. This is what differentiates sellers that work hard to keep satisfied clients, and people that try to make quick money selling fakes.

Are the photographs in the auction taken from another website that is selling authentic merchandise?

Look for inconsistent pictures in the listing. If the picture is taken from someone else, you never know if you are receiving authentic or fake merchandise. Further more; even the seller sometimes might not know that is selling a fake.

Be very cautious if the seller is very new and holds a private auction. The seller should have a decent feedback before choosing the option of private auction.

If you have even the smallest doubts ask for more photos. If you get excuses from the seller and he/she is reluctant in providing more photos, think twice. Also, if the seller provides you with more photos, again look for consistency. Is there a date on the photos? If so, were the photos taken the same day?

Remember: Always ask. The seller should always provide answers. The seller wants you business. An honest and professional seller will always reply with clarifications you might need.

Does the seller have negative feedback reflecting dissatisfied customers? You don't want to buy from someone that has many negatives. If you do not feel comfortable do not buy because it is cheap. Even if seller sells authentic merchandise, he might be selling defective merchandise that could not otherwise sold in a boutique.

Check out this small but extremely important detail on the picture: DO NOT BUY a Gucci, Prada, or Louis Vuitton if there is a round tag hanging from the handbag. Those tags are attached on the fakes.

Buying A Ladies Handbag

By Claire Quaty

One accessory that many women consider a necessity is a handbag. In fact there is such a demand for ladies handbags in the marketplace that the selection just constantly increases. As each new season begins there are dozens of new designs of ladies handbags available.

Every woman has her own sense of style and therefore she'll tend to purchase ladies handbags that reflect that. For some women they only buy designer ladies handbags. These particular types of ladies handbags are crafted from the finest materials and carry the names of some of the most celebrated designers in the world. Designer ladies handbags are very expensive but many women view them as a fashion investment.

If you are interested in buying a designer handbag you'll need to visit a retailer who sells them. These are generally specialty boutiques.

Another venue for purchasing designer ladies handbags is from online retailers. There are many websites that sell brand name designer ladies handbags and will ship them right to your door. This often affords the consumer the biggest selection and it also allows a chance to compare prices. It's important to be careful when purchasing a quality designer bag in this way because you'll want to be wary of imitations.

Going to your local department store is a wonderful place to find a less expensive handbag. Most department stores don't cater to women who are looking for a pricey handbag instead they have a varied selection of reasonably priced and attractive ladies handbags.

One of the most popular types of ladies handbags are those crafted from leather. Leather handbags are available in several different colors. Many women prefer a neutral shade such as brown or black when purchasing a handbag.

Leather can be dyed into many shades though and if you are looking for something unusual in ladies handbags than you might opt for one that is blue or yellow. A handbag in a bright color is a great fashion accessory in the spring or summer.

As many colors of ladies handbags there are, there are just as many styles. Ladies handbags come in over the shoulder designs, small clutches or even a few that can double as a briefcase. Many ladies handbags have detachable handles which gives you a versatile look.

The size of ladies handbags is really dependent on each individual woman's preference. It's overpowering for a small woman to carry a handbag that is oversized. She'd want to choose one that is relative to her own size. The same is true for a taller woman when she is browsing the ladies handbag department. A larger style will complement her body frame better.

Having several ladies handbags is a good idea. It's nice to be able to change handbags depending on the occasion or the outfit you're wearing. An evening at the opera will demand a more sophisticated choice in a handbag than going to the movies.

Whatever your preference in ladies handbags is there is sure to be at least one that seems perfect. Purchase a few and make your handbag as much of a fashion accessory as your jewelry.
