Seeds

SEEDS

In the real estate business, there is a concept called "farming."

An agent will pick a neighborhood as his farm and work the farm in various ways. Sometimes he'll start by mailing out an announcement to each resident to make them aware of his services, his location, and contact information (plowing up the fields).

Then he may conduct a "doorknob hanger" program where he hires people to place flyers right on the doorknobs, reiterating the information he already mailed out (planting the first crop of seeds).

The agent's next step might be to offer to do free appraisals via still another flyer, this one sent through the mail again (watering the first crop).

Now he may decide to do another doorknob flyer, again reiterating the free appraisal offer sent out by mail (cultivating).

Then he does another mailing to each resident, offering a free sales prep analysis to go in and personally point out things that can be done to profitably prepare the home for the market (fertilizing).

Then the agent personally drives through his "farm," making notes of any obvious home improvements that need to be done, along with the addresses of those properties.

Back at the office, he then writes personal letters to each of the addresses where obvious improvements are needed, if they haven't already responded to his recent mailing (weeding).

He keeps on tending his farm, planting, watering, cultivating, fertilizing, and weeding, rain or shine. In other words, he keeps his name and services foremost in his prospects' minds, so that when one of them does think of selling, guess who they are most likely to call?

Keep in mind that this "farmer" started from scratch. He first picked out his farm. Then he had to do the "back-breaking" work of plowing it up and planting the seeds of all the crops he wished to harvest. Getting everything started (setting everything up) was the hardest part, like everything else in life.

Once he got a rhythm going, all he did was to water, cultivate, fertilize, and weed on a regular schedule. And he got a good harvest. But note that he didn't plant his seeds one day and expect that harvest the next. He realized that it would take a minimum of ninety days, depending on the crop he planted. The more bountiful crops take more time.

He also realized that he could start as many farms as he had time to tend, or as he could hire others to tend (in which case he would share-crop), so that his potential harvests matched his efforts.

As the Bible so clearly points out, there is a time and a season to everything . . . a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted . . . Ecclesiastes 3:2-8

Once again, another success lesson from the Lord Himself!

Seeds and more Seeds...What your Garden Needs

By Mike Yeager

Seeds are the most important ingredient in all gardening. Without quality seeds it would be impossible to have a beautiful garden. True seeds vary in size from the dust-like seeds of some orchids to the large seed contained in the coconut. The period of dormancy undergone by many seeds before germination also varies. The seeds may lie dormant for a short period of time before you see growth sprouting above the soil, or they may be dormant for a long time. For some seeds a long dormancy is a result of the extremely hard outer coating of the seeds. Flower seeds, vegetable seeds and garden seeds all germinate very quickly and are therefore perfect for home use.

When your ready to start choosing your seeds here's an important point to keep in mind; You can greatly increase your odds for having a great gardening year by buying from a seed company that's involved in continuous trial programs. In other words, they are always on the look out for better and better seeds. Remember, whether its grass seeds, tomato seeds or flax seed, the plant will only be as good as the original seed.

Quality soil rich in nutrients will help insure that the seeds you planted will reach their full potential. Of course an attentive, caring gardener such as yourself will provide that little extra ingredient that will insure the seeds you plant will experience beautiful growth.

Spend some time as your do research on the web and choose quality merchants that you believe will provide great seeds so you can plant your garden with full confidence that your efforts will be rewarded.

Gardening is a rewarding hobby for anyone and producing beautiful flowers and plants from health seeds will greatly enrich your experience.
