Several Grocery Stores Online

By Melissa Core

The finest application of Internet and public service arenas are definitely the grocery stores online.

Grocery store visit can be pretty troublesome due to the messy parking lot, confusion due to flood of similar yet attractive products and waiting in those serpentine queues to be helped by a brusque manager. Our parents are already tied up with work, traveling, caring for kids, grooming, gym etc and online grocery stores give them immense reprieve in terms of time savings.

Grocery stores are especially convenient to those who prefer to have the minimal human interaction. Here is a nice shopping related site encounters and I narrate you one, though minor but it does prove online grocery stores to be a lot better option. I have resided in the city for fifteen years now. For ten years I lived in an in-law apartment close by to a huge supermarket chain outlet. I visited it about thrice a week. The checkers were not ones I would consider socializing with, but were courteous and productive at their task.

. I have had many horrible

Normally, after knowing the ways, I did my bags of groceries and got out with no incident happening. One afternoon I was in a line of a checker I had never encountered, since I generally shopped very early in the day and she must have been from some other branch. I had six items in the carry basket which I put on the belt and waited. She too stopped, stared and then started seething "What? Am I supposed take those things out of the basket for you?" I was shocked.

Here was this lady, who is supposed to serve the public, has a salary package three times more than what I was getting paid then and was shouting at her customers. Other checkers had no issues with removing things from basket and dinging against a scanner (they were even courteous enough to ask me to leave the basket to them). The basket had items which when paid for would fetch her salary and yet she had issues regarding this. For sure, I would prefer to use online grocery stores the next time and ever after.

More significant is the fact that grocery stores provide service not just to people who dislike notorious public but are actually fearful about it. I am a friend of many such people for whom a grocery store online is the healthiest path of literally no or minimal opposition. In fact, it was through my friend I lived with, that I came across an online grocery store for the first time. She was extremely agoraphobic, disliked, would say even was terrified of going out.

Professionally, she was a freelance artist with clients coming to her and who would use Internet for practically everything on the earth. She found one of the first online grocery stores, a driver company that took order online and delivered the goods within a few hours right at your doorstep. Hence grocery stores are the best for the busy bees and freelancers. I would even say they are perfect for those who want the human element to play a minimal role in the entire process of buying groceries.

Save Money On Your Grocery Bill

By Shannon Jarvies

We've all heard about certain ways to cut your grocery bill like avoiding the grocery store when you're hungry, using coupons on double coupons day, and buying only the items on your list. These are all good tips and we should keep using them. However, I've found a few pointers that might help you save even more on your grocery bill.

The first thing you need to do after you've made your grocery list is to try to figure the total cost of your grocery bill. Make sure you've got everything on the list that you'll need because after you've made an educated guess you're going to go to your purse (or wallet), take out the cash and leave the rest behind. Believe me, this will definitely cut back on the unnecessary extras because you won't have the credit cards to fall back on. And if you're like me, you'd rather be hung upside down by your toe nails than be found short at the check out.

Don't be afraid to look on the day-old bread rack or in the "about to expire" section of the meat department. You have to be careful, but you'll probably be able to tell whether the item is good. Just make sure to use it right away, don't let it sit in your refrigerator for a week. Who knows, it just might "meat" your expectations and save you money in the process!

Another thing to think about is the time of day, time of week and even time of month that you are shopping. I've found that early in the morning and in the middle of the week is when the grocery stores are less busy and you'll be able to get more efficient shopping done. Be careful not to go on the first day or two of the month. Some stores have been known to raise prices because that is the time that social security and welfare checks go out.

Buy in bulk when it makes sense. If you're shopping at Costco or Sam's Club you still need to comparison shop. I've found that some of the items are just as inexpensive at our local grocery store and there have been times when Costco's or Sam's Club prices were higher. So most of the time it makes sense for me to get most of our groceries at my local store because we live two hours away from Sam's Club

Look high and low for savings, literally. The grocery stores purposely place the higher-priced name brand items at eye level. The lower priced generic and store brands are usually higher and lower than the brand name items. Remember that the generic brand or store brand isn't always the less expensive. Some stores I've been to list the cost per ounce, or per item (trash bags) so be sure to compare these prices when shopping.

Last but not least, if you've got kids at home try to find another mom to trade shopping times with. It's a lot easier to shop without kids, you won't be tempted to buy extras just to keep them quiet and you'll have more time to comparison shop. Your chances of having an enjoyable shopping experience will go up as well as their chances for survival!
