*How often did you receive emails like this one I put in this report below?:

Abidjan`s high officials are seeking to smuggle US $22.500.000.00 from Coast d`Ivory to Europe.

The money belongs to The Coast D`Ivory`s Committee for Rehabilitation and Construction(Co^te D`Ivoire Societe Ivoiriene de Raffinage-S.I.R-) in Abidjan. The Refinery had a fire disaster October last year.

A mandated high official contacted some individuals in Europe a week before the recent disturbance, searching for acceptance to above 30% of the money transaction when successfully transferred to an individual account in Europe.

The high official stated that money was realised from over inflated contracts which the contract awarding committee awarded to some foreign contractors for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the refinery and the network pipeline.

He said his group will use the money for personal purposes, declaring that the contracts was awarded to the contractors to the tune of US$42,Million, but his group used it`s positions and over invoiced the amount to the tune of US $62.5 Million.

"Now that the project has been concluded and contractors are coming for their payments" he said, "we now required a reliable and trustworthily person, whom will be used as a sub-contractor and claim the over invoiced amount of US $22.5 Million, which has also been approved for payment and use his foreign account to transfer this fund from the paying bank in Abidjan".

The high official said to one of the contacted individuals that he and his colleagues have mapped out all the necessary modalities towards the claim of this fund, but he added "due to our position we do not want to be noticed". A service of an attorney , he suggested to the contacted resources, "will be used to secure the registration certificate as your sister`s company in Abidjan, to enable us reflect your name as one of the contractors, for board to raise a payment draft covering the fund in your favour".

He said,the contact of the attorney will be forwarded to the first one who`ll agree immediately notifying his interest in this proposal, by sending the name and address of his company and his bank particulars. He informed also that his presence will be needed in Abidjan to enable a meeting with him, to know him and agree on some vital joint venture investments which he will be guaranteed to manage for the high official and his colleagues, since they are still in service .

He confirmed that the agreed bargain of 10% of the total fund will be given to whom will agree, to cover his travelling cost, accommodation and some other expenses he might incur, in addition to 40% that will be used in a joint venture/ investment with him. He declared this process to be supervised by him personally, and the yearly profit will be shared equally by all parties involved, while the remaining 50% of the total fund will be for the high official and three of his colleagues.

He suggested this transaction to be kept confidential, because of their positions in Government and also their committee is fully in charge of all contracts verifications,allocation and approval.

*Did you ask yourself about what to do with it or did you think to act accordingly to get some millions of dollars?

101 Uses for Dirty Diapers

By David Leonhardt

As the father of a toddler, I am an expert on dirty diapers. I know exactly what to do with them: throw them out!

But along comes a New York waste company and a town in California who want me to do something else with my dirty diapers. Like cover my roof with them. Or walk on them. Or build a doghouse with them, perhaps.

Does this sound nuts? Well, it's not. In fact, this project just won the world's top happiness award: the 2003 Happy Guy Award (www.TheHappyGuy.com).

A few months ago, we lived in a "vertical community". When The Little Lady was born, we wanted to expand our home to make room for her, but our neighbors below objected to us digging a basement, and a front porch would have blocked the hall. So we opted to move out to the country, and with that move we had to sacrifice the diaper service and any environmental high ground we could claim.

Yes, we became what we had always wanted to avoid being: diaper-dumpers.

If you have never had children, you may not realize how much a little child can dispose of. In olden days, a couple would have a dozen kids, give or take a few. In these modern times of disposable diapers that just is not possible - the diapers from the first child take up more place on this planet than several dozen siblings would.

So along comes the town of Santa Clarita and Knowaste Inc. proposing to recycle dirty diapers. Sure, you think, just mix them all together, throw in a bit of water, steam them clean and slap them back on baby.

Ironically, the only product that does not seem to be on the list of end uses is diapers. Roofing shingles, sure. Shoe insoles, yes. But not diapers. As I pondered how the world might look if the massive force of dirty diapers was unleashed, it became clear that there could be several big markets. Imagine the pitches ...

From Milan and Paris: "Next we have Oo-La-La Picotte strutting her stuff in a lovely ensemble of pure recycled diapers. Notice the fashionable fuchsia on the upper tilt of the collar. This line will be all the rage in parlors and bars this spring."

From Detroit and Tokyo: "Feel the energy and invigoration. That's the power of 100% pure recycled diapers under the hood. Go ahead. Kick the tires. Pick your color. And drive away safe in the knowledge that you are being protected by 2000 pound of pure recycled baby poop!"

From Los Angeles: "It's a smash hit. Dirty Diapers II: The Recycled Story opened in theatres across the country yesterday and immediately claimed the number one spot. What a movie!"

From New York and Toronto: "This just in. Citizens are being asked NOT to hoard dirty diapers. I repeat, do NOT hoard dirty diapers. The shortage has already slowed the economy by three percent and housing starts have ground to a halt. Please take all your dirty diapers immediately to a drop-off depot. This has been a public service announcement."

So what will YOU be doing with your dirty diapers?
