Storage Sheds - The Un-Clutter Solution

By Tyson J Stevenson

A storage shed is a light structure (generally made of wood) in a back garden used for storage of tools, vehicles, or useful items and is very often used to pursue hobbies like gardening and light engineering. Storage sheds are available in a variety of designs and materials in the market.

Types of Storage Sheds Based on Material. The materials used for storage sheds are wood, plywood, vinyl, metal, steel and Rubbermaid. The materials have various advantages and disadvantages. Wood is the preferred material as it gives an aesthetic appeal. However wood needs to be treated for ultraviolet protection every year and sometimes treatment is also given for protection against pests and borers. Cedar wood is preferred material. Particle wood and plywood are very popular for storage shed sidings. However they are least resistant to water as they get out of shape after repeated wetting and drying. Hence plywood should be avoided in places where it rains frequently.

Vinyl has the advantage of being maintenance free. However vinyl is lower on the visual attractiveness scale. Metal sidings include aluminum, which is light and when anodized gives a good look and lasts a long time. Steel sidings, though cheap, should be avoided as they rust easily. Metal sidings have the least appealing look. Vinyl coated steel has a long life and gives good strength. Rubbermaid and poly vinyl chloride sidings are maintenance free, requiring no painting, no rust treatment and no rot or pest treatment. One thing that should be looked into while selecting siding material is that the siding material should match with the main building siding material. A different siding material may give a contrasting look to the storage shed.

Do It Yourself Kits Vs Professional Installation. Storage sheds can be professionally installed as well as self assembled. Usually for easy assembly, the parts are numbered in self-assembly type storage shed kits. Also assembly instructions are provided with storage-shed kits. Self-assembly may save money and can be a satisfying though difficult experience.

Sizes & Accessories. The usual sizes of storage sheds are, 12' X 24', 12' X 30', 12' X 10', 10' X 14', 10' X 8', 8' X 6' etc. It is better to opt for a double door. For those who want to keep light engineering machines, a good foundation is necessary. Other accessories that come with storage sheds are windows, shutters, weathervanes etc. Hooks and shelves increase the capacity of the storage shed by utilizing vertical space. The windows should be so designed that they match with the main building.

Building Codes and Laws. In various states there are laws on sheds like zoning ordinance, building codes, deed restrictions, building permits, siding materials etc. It is prudent to go through these before installing a storage shed.

Storage sheds are available in various shapes, colors, patterns and sizes. They can be customized to suit an individual's taste. Smaller sheds are called tool sheds. Larger sheds called barns are used to house vehicles, boats and other large items. The prices range from $300 to $4000 depending upon size, material and accessories in the storage shed.

By Jesse Akre

It is always surprising to see the number of homes featuring beautiful foyers, only to see those foyers cluttered with items like shoes, hats, gloves, umbrellas, etc. Nothing can make a beautiful foyer lose its appeal faster than a cluttered mess. So how do homeowners keep their foyers in order? If you were to look at one thing clutter-free foyers most often have in common, it would be a foyer storage bench.

If you have a foyer and you want to keep it tidy, you absolutely must have a foyer storage bench. Without one, it is inevitable that your foyer will eventually become a disarray of stranded shoes and abandoned umbrellas. A foyer storage bench can help prevent this unsightly mess by keeping your things tucked away and out of sight.

A foyer storage bench is an invaluable benefit throughout the year. During the summer it can hold items such as your sun hat and beach towel. In winter, you'll have an out-of-sight area to store your hats and gloves. From umbrellas to briefcases, foyer storage benches offer the perfect place for hiding. Some foyer storage benches even have hooks to hang your hats and coats on, offering even more ways to organize your front-door clutter.

In addition to added storage space, a foyer storage bench can provide you with a comfortable place to seat your visitors. If someone drops in to pick you up for a day of shopping, there's no need for them to stand in the doorway while you finish getting ready. They can sit comfortably on your foyer storage bench for a few minutes while you get ready to head out.
