The Importance Of Having A Baby Ultrasound

By Rory Peters

Everyone loves a baby picture, right? A special image of the little one all dressed in their little outfit and wrapped in a soft blanket is the first baby picture that most will see. The parents, however, often get to see an even earlier photo thanks to a baby ultrasound.

This procedure is not painful at all and involves a cool gel being applied to the pregnant woman's stomach. At that time, a handheld device that looks similar to a product scanner is rubbed across the gel. During that time, the doctor watches a small screen that has been placed next to the woman. This screen is often a confusing collage of images to the parents, but the doctor sees something very different. When the pointing device is in perfect location, a beautiful image can be viewed on the baby ultrasound machine. Once the doctor shows the parents the exact part of the screen that shows their baby, they are overcome with joy.

A baby ultrasound is a necessary part of prenatal care in that it can often detect any potential problems before the actual birth. Among them, improper positioning of the child or irregular heartbeat can be diagnosed with a baby ultrasound. In addition to showing an image, a baby ultrasound also allows the parents to hear their child's heartbeat for the first time.

At the end of the medical session, the doctor will likely ask the couple if they would like to have a photo of the baby ultrasound. This is a terrific image that can be taken home and shared with family and friends. It's also a wonderful addition to a scrapbook, which most parents want to own in honor of their child and all of his/her special, or first, accomplishments.

While a baby ultrasound is a necessary part of caring for an unborn child and monitoring his/her placement and health, it also provides the parents with a way to get a glimpse of their unborn child. But, what else can a baby ultrasound provide? It can solve what is, perhaps, still one of life's greatest remaining mysteries. The sex of the child can be determined with a baby ultrasound which can provide parents with an easier decision when selecting the perfect baby clothing, decorating the nursery and requesting the perfect baby shower gifts.

The Importance Of Having A Baby Ultrasound

A baby ultrasound should only be performed by a licensed medical doctor and in a professional setting. The information in this article is to be used for informational purposes only. It should not be used in place of, or in conjunction with, professional medical advice. Anyone with questions regarding a baby ultrasound must consult their physician for further information.

Find Out The Gender Of Your Baby – Ultrasound Testing

By Stephen White

The pregnancy ultrasound is by far the most exciting and fun test for women to take. At approximately 18 weeks into the pregnancy it is used to accurately pinpoint the expected arrival date of the baby, as well as see how the baby is developing. Yes, you will be able to determine whether the baby is a boy or a girl as well.

1. Track The Development Of Your Baby

A general practitioner will be able to tell if your baby is healthy or whether there is cause for concern. Although this is quite alarming for the expecting parents, it is essential for the health of your baby. If something is wrong, you will be required to go in for further testing.

2. Get To Know Your Baby

With Ultrasound, you can be introduced to a visual of your baby for the very first time! In many cases this is the first real wakeup call that both expecting parents have that a baby is on the way. Although tiny and not fully developed, the baby will be moving and some of its shape will be recognizable. The person carrying out the ultrasound will be able to point out how the baby is doing and answer any questions.

3. Is It A Boy Or A Girl?

The pregnancy ultrasound will reveal the burning question asked to the expecting parents time and time again – is it a boy or a girl? Depending on the procedures employed by the place giving the ultrasound, this information will be given to the parents upon request. This information is given on the understanding that it is as it appears, and may not be correct. Some rare cases have been known to be wrong, but in general, it is always right.

4. Things You Must Know

As you know, the Ultrasound can help to predict the due date for the baby. Unfortunately, if the prediction by the Ultrasound differs from your doctors prediction, you need to prepare for both due dates! A later ultrasound may reveal a different date. If this happens, prepare for the earliest date, just in case.
