There Is a CIO in Your Business – 2

People on project management often come together as strangers. We can't be learning, collaborating, optimizing the project, or making commitments without a relationship built on trust, respect, appreciation, care for each other, and practices of commitment-making.

To do that, we oversees a staff of 15, meaning that, in his company, almost 10 percent of the workforce is involved in Information Technology IT. But we said that investment in technology is essential to keeping the business profitable.

Part of the Chief Information Officer CIO responsibility is on the Information Technology IT side, but it also was to change an organization.

For some, the black-and-white nature of project management work makes for a refreshing challenge. Delivering a Project Management "on time and under budget" can provide great emotional rewards. The job offers the opportunity to lead, and new projects keep the work fresh.

There are CRM success stories, but success in a Customer Relationship Management CRM implementation may best be measured by the restraint an organization shows in its goals and expectations.

Large corporations such as insurance companies and banks may also hire PMs to manage the implementation of new standards or practices in their many branch offices. Internet companies often look for project managers to oversee site launches or the development of new applications.

The Chief Information Officer CIO is responsible for setting his company's technology direction and making sure it aligns with the company's business goals.

All roads lead to the Chief Information Officer CIO. It's a combination of breadth and depth, and part of that is enterprise visibility. The CEO and CFO have that from their own purviews, but they don't understand how work really gets done, how the business truly operates, the way CIOs do.

We won't dwell on the obvious: the rise in competitive pressures worldwide. But we're seeing the consequences of this in the continued campaign to cut costs and a shift in emphasis from revenue growth to profitable growth.

Companies have to deal with change. Technology is a critical component of that change. The Chief Information Officer CIO must have to be part of the process or it will pass you by.

Many organizations are embarking on a strategies that leverage globalization trends. The Chief Information Officer CIO is one of the few places in the organization where all of those things come together and where there's a view across the enterprise. These trends drive transformations that are enterprisewide and hugely dependent on technology for their success. The Chief Information Officer CIO is at the eye of the storm.
