

This Free E-Book is brought to you by Natural-Aging.com.

100% Effective Natural Hormone Treatment
Menopause, Andropause And Other Hormone Imbalances
Impair Healthy Healing In People Over The Age Of 30!

Types Of Bird Baths

By Dylan Mccabe

The birds in our locality that visit us each and everyday, find nothing better than lovely layout of fresh and clean water for their bird bath. It is like a little oasis for them. You will definitely be repaid for your thoughtful deed of creating a bird bath with a sight that will appease you heart. For a matter of fact just watching the feathered creatures having fun in the water will make all your efforts worth it.

Many a times this type of arrangement is created for people too. A well created bird bath can be a perfect addition to garden environment. I found great Pet related information at

<http://www.pleasepetme.com>

. This creation serves two purposes at the same time; besides being visually attractive it is also serving a useful purpose. The right combination of type and style of the bird bath can increase the appeal of your outdoor garden area and thus can then be enjoyed by both birds and people alike.

Also it acts like a great tool for bird watchers to attract birds and see them form a closer distance. Thus in turn it is a great incentive for bird watchers to build as bird bath for our feathered friends. By using one the bird baths you can attract a diverse collection of species of birds, as proclaimed by some watchers. If you actually check this out you will notice that a greater number of avian creatures are enticed by water than by seeds.

Although amazing, only seed-eating species like the blue jays and the sparrows are attracted to the feeders. You might rarely get a glance of a finch or a bright red cardinal but you can be sure that the feeders will attract the same kind of birds.

Beside the normal seeds, insects and fruits are also a part of the diet of a number of birds. Your seed feeder won't be able to draw bird species like catbirds, wrens and waxwings which are the ones that will give your garden a bit of diversity. Though, you might be able to interest them in a wonderful bird bath. All birds don't indulge in seed, but all do drink water, thus the wonderful thing of a bathing area is that it attracts a wider audience.

Types Of Bird Baths

Now that you have realized that a well crafted bird bath can complete your garden, you will have to remember a small number of things whilst out shopping. So as to enable the bird to stand properly in the water, ensure that the article has a rough bottom. Also the bird bath has never to be deep, recommended height is three inches or less.

It has been found out that the hum of trickling water attracts more birds than stagnant water, thus it would be great if you would think of including a fountain element to summon the birds to the water oasis.

In Dylan's spare time he helps out with the following internet websites:

<http://www.mmdatahub.com>

<http://www.massreleases.com>

Hot Birds Need A Bird Bath

By Mike Barus

Just like people, birds get hot and thirsty. Especially during the blistering summer months, your favorite flying friends may be roasting in their feathers. Help out your local birds and provide them with a shady spot to splash, play, bathe, and drink—a bird bath! Especially in areas that lack natural sources of water, such as springs, ponds, lakes, or streams, bird baths are essential for the health and happiness of birds in your area. In addition to helping out your fine feathered friends, a bird bath will attract all sorts of birds to your yard and allow you and your family to enjoy their company.

Think of it: if you were a bird, where would you want to splash about? Would you choose a muddy, stinky puddle or a clean, fresh bird bath? The choice is not just obvious to humans, but birds have a distinct preference. Once you have decided to lend a helping hand to your local birds, make the trek to find a bath that fits into your style and design of your yard. There are tons of options, from baths that borrow style from the white marble columns of ancient Greece to fantastically modern creations that could double for an avant garde statue.

After you have brought your bird bath home, find a place to set up the bath well within sight of your outdoor and indoor spaces. Consider installing a bird bath near your porch, patio, deck, or house's windows so that you can enjoy the birds from anywhere in your home. Fill the bird bath with cool, clean water and watch the bird flock around your bath.

In order to draw more birds, consider using a fountain bird bath instead of a traditional bird bath that holds still water. Birds love the sound of running water and prefer fountain bird baths dramatically over still bird baths. If a fountain bird bath is out of your budget, consider creating your own fountain. Something as simple as a bucket with a hole drilled in the bottom positioned over top of your existing bird bath works just as great as expensive fountain bird bath, although it may not be quite as aesthetically pleasing.

Types Of Bird Baths

Keep in mind that birds need bird baths year round, especially in some parts of the country that seem to be out of the grip of Jack Frost. Instead of putting your bird bath inside during the winter, purchase a model that can remain outdoors for the entire year. Heated bird baths work to ensure that ice does not form in the bath, but does not produce a birdie hot tub, so birds will keep coming to your yard regardless of the weather.

Mike Barus specializes in Birds.

<http://www.bird-bath-i.com>

This Free E-Book has been brought to you by Natural-Aging.com.

100% Effective Natural Hormone Treatment
Menopause, Andropause And Other Hormone Imbalances
Impair Healthy Healing In People Over The Age Of 30!