Vincent Price's Ultimate Horror!

By Stephen Schochet

Vincent Price's Ultimate Horror! by Stephen Schochet

Vincent Price was always of two minds about his horror movie career. On the one hand it was a way for an actor to age and keep working. But the gourmet cook and art collector often felt that these films were beneath him.

Always looking for extra publicity the Saint Louis born thespian pulled many stunts to get attention for his films. One time he went to the Hollywood Wax museum and disguised himself as his wax dummy likeness. Standing motionless with a hypodermic syringe he would wait patiently for unsuspecting people to watch by, and startle them by reaching out and squirting them with water.

Vincent 's ultimate horror involved the world's most famous pop star. He was thrilled to be hired by Michael Jackson to record the narration for the song Thriller. He agreed to do it for a small fee. But when Thriller became the greatest hit of all time he wanted more money. Michael Jackson refused to compensate him and Price was furious.

About 8 years later Vincent was sitting around his house quietly watching TV, not feeling well under a blanket to keep him warm. The TV show Hard Copy came on. There was a segment about Michael Jackson and a little boy. Vincent shocked the household suddenly shouting, " Oh my god! Oh my God!" His wife Coral came running into the living room, "Vincent, what's the matter?"

The Old man pointed at the TV, " He's doing to the little boy what he did to me!"

Stephen Schochet is the author and narrator of the audiobooks "Fascinating Walt Disney" and "Tales Of Hollywood". The Saint Louis Post Dispatch says, " these two elaborate productions are exceptionally entertaining." Hear realaudio samples of these great, unique gifts at www.hollywoodstories.com.

THE "SEVEN Cs": PARTNERSHIP DANGER SIGNS – The 4th C: CUMULATIVE MONEY PROBLEMS

By Dorene Lehavi

A series of articles exploring the seven critical areas that can indicate a partnership is in trouble.

The 4th C: CUMULATIVE MONEY PROBLEMS

Conflicts over money are very high on the list of reasons that 70% of business partnerships fail. I'm not referring necessarily to lack of money. The damage to business partnerships stem from the fact that each of us have different attitudes about money and therefore handle it in different ways.

The most hopeful scenario is that differences have been discussed openly at the outset of the partnership and are continually a topic reviewed with level heads.

Most often that is not the case. Here is a sample list of the types of problems businesses run into around money where partners can have very opposing views: financial risk taking collections investment of profits family involvement on acquisitions under-capitalization/ involving outside investors perceived inequality in remuneration of each partner based on each one's view of each other's work and responsibility hiring and salaries of employees investments in outside experts to train, coach, market, etc.

The money issues in business that accumulate over the course of time are based on many factors, some personal, some internal to the business and some on outside forces beyond anyone's control.

Bill and Vincent were investing in a new business. Vincent was unemployed with limited funds, so at the outset Bill did the financing. There was growing tension between them because of this. Bill felt he had more right to make decisions. He also had a subtle way of belittling Vincent because of it. How could such interaction be a good basis for a new business?

They were wise enough to seek coaching, during which I helped Vincent spell out the behavior that was not obvious to Bill. Vincent on his own was too uncomfortable to communicate clearly how he was feeling. When it was out in the open in our coaching sessions they were able to make some changes so Vincent was able to contribute more in ways that made him feel respected. They also set some goals and deadlines for adjustments in the financial contributions.

Open communication in this scenario prevented problems from escalating into major conflict which could have ultimately ended the partnership.

Partnership agreements can go a long way to spell out how money decisions will be made. However, partnership agreements are not very efficient in predicting how personalities will react in various unforeseen situations and crises.

Protect your partnership as much as possible. Choose your partner wisely. Choose your business wisely. Engage a coach early in the process. Here are some of the ways it will pay a high return on your investment: make sure partners are on the same page and well suited discuss important issues unique to you for the partnership agreement improve communication and as a result focus on the smooth functioning of the business instead of on personality issues better and more efficient decision making and problem solving greater commitment to the end result and less time wasted in disagreements and problems more pleasant atmosphere carried over to employees, clients and vendors devoted employees better service resulting in increased bottom line
