What Works For You

When you first jumped into this very large swimming pool called the Internet, you knew you were going to have to swim with the sharks. You know who the sharks are right? They are everybody besides you that will be promoting the same programs and products that you thought you were going to have all to yourself.

All of the experts told you to get a product or service of your own. Hell, you said. That should be easy. I'll just hook up with an established affiliate program and, Shazam! I'll be rich in no time.

That's not how it works Mr and Mrs marketing maven. You have to find something that works for YOU, and not everybody else. You have to feel comfortable with what you are selling online. Don't get into a program or service because the entire state of Texas is making money selling that same service.

Those people in Texas probably have experience at what they are doing. Just because you have an expensive set of golf clubs doesn't mean you can go out and beat Tiger Woods at the Masters.

What Works For You

It's the same in online marketing. You have to know what the people are buying, or at least know what the masses are interested in purchasing. If you don't have a clue what people want, it's like the dog chasing his proverbial tail.

You have to experiment, research, test, experiment, research, test, on and on. Everything you've ever read by anyone involved with online marketing all leads back to the same fact. Nobody gives you anything for free. If you want to be successful, you have to do the work.

Finding what works for you may take a month or two months, or even a year or two. It's trial and error, and, learning from those errors so you don't make them again and again. It's not an easy task finding what you want. But when you find it, you will know it right away.

It will be like looking for that special someone, for what seemed like most of your life. Then one day you found that someone and that feeling you had in your heart told that was the one. You know that feeling.....you just knew it was right.

Where would we be today if people in the beginning of time just went along with the status quo and didn't both to look for what they wanted. Without experimentation and hard work we wouldn't be able to enjoy all of the things we now take for granted.

Things like potatoes, radishes, and carrots. Those foods did not grow above the ground like apples, pears, and cherries. They had to be found, and tested, and researched to find out whether or not they were edible.

That may be stretching the point somewhat, but you get the idea. You have to find something you enjoy doing. That takes time, hard work, and perseverance. Only you will know when you found what you want.

Be an individual, don't run with the crowd. Be your own person. Don't sell ebooks because everybody says that's the thing to do online. Do what you want. Do what you feel comfortable doing, and don't let anybody blow smoke up your tailpipe.

You May Never Know What You're Missing

By Joyce C. Lock

You May Never Know What You're Missing by Joyce C. Lock

Surely, most everyone who's ever attended church has heard a preacher say, "Faith without works is dead," only to hear echoes in the background chanting, "Uh-huh."

He, then, proceeds with, "Show me your faith without your works and I'll show you your faith by my works," quoting James 2:18 ... which gets the Amen Corner going, "Amen! Right on! Hallelujah! Preach it brother!"

Many sit there (feeling so superior), thinking they work in the church all the time, they've just been patted on the back, and that this sermon is for someone else. Yet, I tend to wonder if anyone in the congregation understood its meaning.

Until we trust God enough to take blind steps of faith, we haven't exercised faith at all. But, instead of taking those steps, when the miracles don't happen, we blame God by saying He's changed.

Our works don't prove our faith. Our works of faith prove our faith, "Uh-huh! Amen! Right on! Hallelujah! Preach it brother!"

When God speaks to you, try taking spiritual risks. Otherwise, you may never know what you are missing.
