What's On Your Door, Nuthin'?

By Susan James

What's On Your Door, Nuthin'? by Susan James

Someone once asked me: "How come children get what they want and adults don't ?"

I then usually ask, "Well, what's on `your' door?"

Lots of children, if they have some form of allowing parents, have pictures of horses on their walls and doors, and pictures of other stuff that they like and want.

If you'd study this a bit....you may find that the kids have the stuff in their experience that is pasted on their doors and walls. As I write this I have two girlfriends with children who also have horses ! When you go to the children's bedrooms, guess what's on their walls? Horses!

So, what's the catch?

Adults think it's childish and messes up the walls and stuff. Therefore, Adults are too "big" to paste their dreams on their own walls, because, why? Well, it's childish and messes up the walls!

But it gets even more ironic. Many businesses have story or goal boards in their offices. Car Dealers have them. Movie and TV Producer offices have them. Have them, what? Walls that have stuff they want to happen, pasted up there!

We allow children to paste stuff up on our doors and walls, and successful businesses have their desires, goals and intentions pasted up on their walls and doors, but what about the rest of us?

What's On Your Door, Nuthin'?

What about the rest of real life? What do our families want?
What do we as individuals want for our lives and lifestyles.

Are we just supposed to help our employers reach their business goals and desires, of which we may or may not receive direct benefit from?

What about our own personal lives? What about our dreams coming true? Do you have a personal story board or Magic Wall on your door or wall at your home, or in your own office that pertains to your life and lifestyle?

On my door, I have my life. I have it glued and pasted. It is my life. A section of it I'll tell you about, because this is the part of me that shows up in my writing. I have a Magic Wall too!

Over a year ago, Vanity Fair did a huge article on Successful Women Authors and Publishers. Annie Leibowitz took these great pictures of these women, and one of the pictures was of about 15 of them in a warehouse sitting.

Writers, Authors Publishers, non-fiction, fiction. You would know them. A great photo shoot !

For a while I had this 4 page spread in a binder with some of my other intentions. But I kept setting stuff on top of the binder and would forget to look at it.

So up on my door it went.

What has my Magic Wall and Magic Door brought me?
Over 30 writing products and extensions and the opportunities attached to my writing just keep flowing to me.

Point? Act as a child. Dare to put your dreams up where you can see them. There is a true "Mechanics" at work, and it simply works! You're Dreams just might come true. Mine are and have been.

I Am Biodegradable. My Writing Is Not.

By David Leonhardt

My dad was wrong. I just discovered that I am good for nuthin' after all. In fact I've been good for nuthin' all along. I am 100% biodegradable and that means I can be recycled into nuthin'. It also means that no matter how much I waste, no matter how much I consume, no matter how much I pollute, in the end I am environment-friendly. Best of all, I now have an end use.

Now that's something to put on my resume!

This comes as particularly good news to somebody who is not sure what his purpose is. Sometimes I write these humor columns, pretending to be funny. Sometimes people even laugh, and I worry that it might be the start of an ominous trend.

Sometimes I am selling my happiness book, pretending to be a successful author. With 2,000 copies of my book keeping the floor from floating upwards, perhaps I AM successful. Levitating floors are generally not considered signs of success in this part of the country.

Sometimes I am optimizing websites for search engine rankings. "What exactly does that mean?" I am often asked.

"Well...it means that I get my clients' site high up in the searches." Blank stare.

I try again. "It means that I help Google show you my clients' web sites. Blank stare.

"Well...I'm not sure how to explain it. But I get paid to do it." People understand that.

"I turn on a machine that defluctuates the turbo-rotating modulator down at the spare parts plant," someone adds.

"What exactly does that mean?" I ask.

"Beats me. But I get paid to do it." We are soulmates.

Sometimes I write for pay, because people seem to want something written. They hope that if they can't say it themselves, I might be able to find just the right words.

"C'mon, David. You have lots of words. Why don't you lend me some? Why, just last week you promised to 'defenestrate' me, whatever that means." They want me to put their thoughts into words, and occasionally they want me to create their thoughts. I worked for a politician years ago. I vaguely remember how to write somebody else's thoughts before he knew he had them.

What's On Your Door, Nuthin'?

"So what do you write?"

"Web site copy, mostly."

"Really? Not another book?"

"No, I still have 2,000 copies of the last book piled up in my office."

"I'm sure they'll sell quickly, David."

"Really? Want one?"

"Uh...gotta go. It's time for my pet goldfish's nap."

I also write this humor column faithfully every week. But people actually PAY me to write website copy. Now, dear reader, answer me this question. Would you rather be reading this hilarious column, loaded with frosting and topped with chocolate syrup, or would you rather read plain vanilla website copy.

OK, go ahead and read the website copy, then. See if I care.

One thing my website copy and this column have in common is that they are not biodegradable. Remember how computers would save the environment as they replace the three gazillion tones of paper we trash every few hours in offices around the world and elsewhere?

Now we discover that all that paper at least was biodegradable, recyclable, reusable. It wasn't all that bad for the environment, after all. But the monitor you are reading this on will last forever. (SFX: evil laughter) Adventure seekers from the planet Zorgopppt will land here in the year 2304 and discover all these abandoned monitors scattered around.

One Zorgoppptian will say to the other, "prrg, ddyte h hthp oooo djudu" (Translation: "Groovy paper weights!")

But they won't find me, thanks to my lifetime achievement. I'll be long gone, because I am (chest swells with pride) biodegradable.
