Where can I find Discount Golf Balls?

There are a number of websites that provide all the information on golfing products and services that one could possibly need. Any avid player craves for quality sport equipments and these websites are all flooded with quality information on how to purchase discount golf ball and other golf equipments and accessories. These sites provide excellent customer service and low prices on all golf equipments. So if you want information on discount golf balls, equipments, a new putter, lake balls it can all be made on various online golf portals.

Every week number of brand new golf balls hit the market. All this can be ordered by visiting these sites where it is available discounted and affordable prices. Some of the brand names for new and used Golf Balls include Titleist, Nike, Strata, Callaway, Maxfli, Wilson, Top Flite, and others. Titleist Pro V1 X 332 utilizes large core, multi-component urethane elastomer technology. The Pro V1 became the number one non-wound golf ball in just its first week on the PGA Tour. The Pro V's tour-proven higher ball speed, lower spin, results in longer drives and iron distances. This ball is best suited for players with the highest swing speeds and exceptionally high spin or high lift launch conditions.

Dunlop model in the golf ball is the Advanced Titanium, which promises enhanced distance. With a suggested retail price of just $18 for a 15-ball pack, Dunlop's Advanced Titanium ball has an oversized, titanium-enriched core encased in a Surlyn cover. Slazenger with a suggested retail price of $52 per dozen, has launched the Black Label ball. A multi-layer product, the Black Label ball features an oversized solid core, an interlocking layer of polyurethane between the core and outer cover, and a soft urethane outer cover. With a Hybrid 402 dimple pattern, the Slazenger ball promises distance, spin, feel and durability.

Titleist, HP Eclipse MINT is for golfers seeking extremely low driver and iron spin for long, straight, more accurate distance. High partial wedge spin provides added greenside control. Advanced dual core technology, very low spin for long, straight driver distance is the trademarks of the ball.

Designed specifically to improve playability for Low to Mid handicappers, the Titleist NXT has been engineered to deliver high, soft approach shots. The NXT takes advanced solid core technology to a new level. The resilient, soft compression core is complemented by a thin, soft, Fusablen cover. This ball delivers long, two-piece driver and iron distance, soft responsive feel and exceptional short-game control. Titleist Pro V1x delivers very low driver and iron spin combined with very high speed. The result is exceptionally long distance and a straight flight, particularly for the game's hardest hitters. Discounted golf balls are available for these brands on various sites.

The other option apart from discounted golf ball is of the used golf balls. Besides having so many varieties to choose from among Wilson, Top Flight, Dunlop, Titleist, Maxfli, Pinnacle, Strata, Slazenger, Taylor Made, Callaway, Nike and more the golfer can buy a specific brand and color of his or her choice. ### Golf Balls That Match Your Skills

By Robert Thatcher

Any golfer knows the role of the golf balls in their plays. No matter how good a golfer is, if he is without golf balls then his skills have no value. Every golfer knows these facts. This is why golf balls had become the primary commodities among golfers.

There is no general way to determine which golf ball is best for individual players. This factor is almost entirely dependent on the golfer's own preference, what he may do with the ball and how much will his pockets allow him.

For some, a single brand of golf ball says it all. They would stick to them for as long as they would want and most would never play if not playing with their particular brand of golf balls. Some people may call this insanity but this is an individual preference.

While a number of golfers may be practicing this, it is not thoroughly advisable to adopt this same attitude towards golf balls. The most ideal way of choosing balls is to use common sense, especially for beginning golfers.

A beginning golfer must never keep in mind what other people has to say about golf ball brands, may it be positive or negative. It must be pointed out that loosing balls for beginners is natural and this would mean that he need not focus yet on the quality or the brand name. What he needs is the low cost value the golf balls offer.

The best option for beginners is to buy golf balls sold in bulk, around 50 balls or so in a single bargain. These normally are balls that have been gathered from the greens and have been "recycled". What's good with these used balls is that they are commonly branded (but that doesn't matter actually) and one need not grieve for having lost any of such balls. On the average, losing a golf ball is around a hundred percent for most beginners through sessions of hit practicing.

With upgrades in the skills come the upgrades on the ball qualities. But this still don't suggest that intermediate players should rush to nearby golfing supplies and buy the most expensive balls from there. The golfer must not compromise price for his level of skill.

The golf balls he buys next will depend on his skill level. If he has great tendencies on failing on hits, he still needs to stay put with cheap balls. But this is not to the extent of using the same used balls. This time buy new inexpensive balls.

If for instance the golfer usually miss-hit the balls, then the balata-covered balls is nor the most appropriate ball to choose. Scratch players on the other hand would most likely prefer the golf balls that would offer lesser spin and more control.

As the basic theories for golfing, and most sports in that case explain, the skill improves with the frequency of playing. With improvements on the golfer's skills, he may result to trying new golf ball brands. Through this, he may determine what golf ball brands will suit him best. But this doesn't end here nor this factor decides what type of games the golfer may produce. He still have to reconsider other golfing components such as the golf clubs, the golf courses and other golfing accessories.
