Who Is Most Likely To Become A Target Of Crime?

By Bill Wallmuller

Are we all likely targets for crime? You would be correct, to some extent, if you answered this question in the affirmative. There is no one person that is immune from crime, but there are segments of our society who stand a greater chance of a run in with a criminal or criminal act.

These segments would benefit most by being familiar with ways to avoid being crime's targets. Recommended is that this group [as should all] become familiar with crime through crime reports and the recommendations contained therein. Obtaining some self-defense devices and learning how to use this technology is likewise, recommended.

Well, who are the people that make up this segment of our population and why are they more vulnerable?

They are more likely to be a victim of crime for various reasons including their age, their occupation, the time of day they work and the area in which they live. This list is not inclusive and there are plenty of combinations of scenarios that would also make a person more vulnerable.

Here is a short list of examples of groups of people and their occupations that would benefit from modern personal self-defense technology:

· Senior citizens · Night Shift Workers · Taxi drivers · Disabled persons · Delivery drivers · Babysitters · Postal employees · Bar maids · Joggers · Tourist · Retail clerks · Students · Health workers

The above list is far from exhaustive and the groups named in the list should be obvious to anyone giving it some thought.

We would hope that our communities would get the word out to this segment of the population, but we know that is not always going to be the case. In actuality, we must depend less on these agencies [including the police] to give us continuing and proper protection because their plates are full and they can only do so much. Sometimes we will have to take the matter and precautions into our own hands.

With this program it is possible to – Reduce crime as well as reduce the overall cost of crime. The criminal can be held responsible for repaying all his/her associated crime costs. After a criminal has served their sentence, this person can then be reintroduced into society, with little or no likelihood of them ever returning to prison again. It is felt that most inmates will want to support the new programs.

All people in the world are affected by crime to some degree. Many persons have had one or more crimes perpetrated directly against them.

Every person who pays taxes must pay a portion of criminal crime costs. Wouldn't every taxpayer welcome a chance to pay fewer taxes? A very unique method is available to put the onus on the criminal for paying all their associated crime costs.

Police Forces are hampered beyond reason. Most Police Forces are short of manpower, and beyond this, in so many cases the Police initially apprehend the perpetrator, only to have him/her released immediately. Many times this nearly doubles the work for the Police.

The amount of crimes being committed in today's world is astronomical and forever increasing. Types and severity of crimes are escalating daily. Should criminal and justice systems around the world be patterned around this program, the positive improvements over time likely can not be envisioned at this time.

This writing will provide the reader with much interesting, thought provoking data. It is surprising that a

I'm married, with three adult children, and a grandfather of two boys.
I enlisted in the Air Force at 18 and spent a number of years serving my country.
Next I went into business for myself and am presently president and owner of my own custom cabinet business, with my only son.

After many, many years of great frustration with the "PENAL AND JUSTICE SYSTEM", I wrote a book covering this.

Writing required much research and planning and I am very satisfied with the final result of my efforts.
