Who else wants to burn CDs off the internet for free? by Syd Johnson

It's all over the news. Every few months the Recording Industry Association of America or RIAA sues a couple hundred people because they wanted to burn CDs off the internet for free. You thought about it and you don't want to be one of them. Maybe it's your conscience, your sense of ethics or your lack of a legal representative --you're middle class and can't afford a lawyer right now.

Regardless of the reason, you don't have to become a criminal to burn CDs off the internet for free.

Free samples from legitimate retailers

One of the best ways to get free music is to sign up for legitimate music websites and get some free samples. Many of the big online retailers such as Amazon.com, Napster (they're legit now), and Launch Music Radio offer free music downloads sanctioned by the artist themselves and their record labels. You won't have access to millions of songs, but it's the most ethical and economical way to burn CDs off the internet.

Sign up to a few cool music sites, get free mp3's samples, save them on your computer and burn them on your CD and still be on the right side of the law.

Flat fee for unlimited downloads

Another ways to get free music online is to sign for the many sites that offer unlimited downloads for a flat fee. Pay a flat monthly or annual fee and you get access to millions of songs, movies and other types of media. The monthly fees can range from $10 to $30 per month. Imagine the amount music that you download without any copyright restrictions. After the first 30 to 50 downloads, anything after that is basically free.

Join a Music Club

There's also the old standby, Music Clubs. Columbia House still offers free CDs to new members, plus there are many more opportunities to earn free songs and CDs as you purchase more music. Also, they're cheap. You can sign up directly from their website and have your free music in a couple of days.

By working within the guidelines, you also encourage emerging artists to offer more of their products for free to online enthusiasts.

One of the best free music download program is the iTunes juke box. by Syd Johnson

The iTunes free music download program is great because of the incredible amount of functions that you can perform with the music. Another important thing is that the iTunes jukebox works well on both PC and Mac computers. So here's our quick guide to some thing that you can do with the iTunes jukebox.

1. Share your music - You can share your music with up to five different computers in your house. Just click on share music to setup your authorizations. The other computers need their own copies of the iTunes jukebox to see your preferences.

Once their copy of the music player is turned on, you can play music from your computer and have it piped through your entire house. Or, they can simply go through your collection and listen to some of the tunes in your collection.

2. Burn Music - You can burn as many CDs as you like from this free music download program. iTunes does not place any restrictions on the amount of music that can you can burn, and now they are offering the opportunity to print out a customer case for your CD.

You don't have to rely on magic markers to label them and keep track of the songs on the playlist. Create your own customer mixes and more. It is very easy because the player uses your own computer as a guide. It burns CDs at the highest possible rate supported by your computer.

3. Discover Music - you can go through the billboard charts that track the top selling Rap, country, Hip Hop, Adult Contemporary and Alternative hits and more. Once you've browsed the selections, if you see an item, you buy the songs or the entire albums directly through iTunes and sync it up with your iPod player.

This is one of the best music deals that you will find online.
