Why Do Dog Lovers Love Dog Lover Gifts?

By IPRWire Staff Writer

Ask anyone who owns a dog, and they'll tell you that dog lover gifts rank high on their "must have"

list for holidays and birthdays. It's not at all uncommon to see dog owners sporting all types of paraphernalia celebrating their pooches and their respective breeds. What gives? Why do dog owners love to proclaim their canine love so loudly?

Perhaps the answer lies in the role that dogs play in society—and in American families. Today, over 65 million dogs live their lives in harmony with humans. And an overwhelming number of those "humans" (approximately 92 percent) consider their dogs more than just pets - they consider them family.

It's no wonder. Dogs, with their unique personalities and willingness to please, are often given the same liberties at home as other family members. As family members, dogs are no longer relegated to back yards or cramped kennels. Today's dogs are treated to regular grooming, doggie-daycare, and organic treats.

Owners demand human comforts for their dogs, and they aren't shy about celebrating it. It's not surprising, then, that dog owners welcome dog lover gifts from others who recognize the unique relationship they have with their pets.

This "humanization" of dogs has elevated the amount of care provided to man's best friend. From veterinary care to cosmetic products geared towards dogs, dog lovers often seek the same quality of products they would want for their children. It stands to reason, then, that those devoted to their family pooches welcome (and maybe even hope for) any gifts that showcase their four-legged family member.

In the past, the choices available to those shopping for dog lover gifts were limited. Coffee cups and bumper stickers were often the only options readily available. However, with the advent of so many pet superstores and online specialty pet stores, more options are available than ever before. Just a few items available for dog lovers today are:

Why Do Dog Lovers Love Dog Lover Gifts?

- * Dog-themed jewelry. From charms to bracelets to earrings, male and female dog owners alike enjoy wearing long-lasting mementos of their favorite pooch.
- * Picture frames. Today, Fido's face sits on the mantle right along with the rest of the family.
- * Magnets. Pictures of children aren't the only thing decorating American refrigerators these days.
- * Key chains. They carry the keys to their owner's hearts, so it's only fitting that they carry the rest of the keys, as well.

Dogs aren't just pets anymore, they are family members. As such, their roles in families are celebrated in much the same manner as children or devoted companions. With sales of dog-related products in the billions of dollars each year, owners have made their pet priorities ring out loud and clear. Anyone who graces them with dog lover gifts can only be affirming that proclamation.

Gifts For Dog Lovers

By Robert Davis

Our passion for dogs can sometimes go to the extreme. We treat our pet like it was our own baby, not to mention the love we feel for newly born puppies. Is this just a case of "man's best friend"? Or is it something greater?

We'll let you be the judge of that.

Dogs are just so cute that some dog owners go to the extent of calling their pets "sweetie". Others call their dogs their "kids," or "babies."

Dog lovers are limitless in the terms of affection they can come up with for their pets. It is even common to see pets that look like their owners, and vice versa. This is probably just another sign of our love for them.

Dogs give unconditional love to their owners. This is a characteristic of all dog breeds. A lot of dog lovers return this love in the form of dog gifts. And the selection of dog gifts appear in all shapes, varieties, and sizes.

Why Do Dog Lovers Love Dog Lover Gifts?

There is a wide selections of dog gifts. There are dog baskets, dog books, dog collars, dog crates, dog clothes, food, dog accessories, medicines, vitamin supplements, just to name a few.

Dog gifts can be any dog related item, from dog toys to dog supplies and to a program in dog training. Whatever the giver can imagine.

A common misconception among gift givers is that dog gifts are gifts for pet lovers or the owners themselves. In most instances, they are not. They are for the dog. But in a way, they benefit the dog owner by saving him or her from the expenses he/she would have incurred buying the items.

Dog books are great gifts, generally given to new pet owners. Normally, they contain details pertaining to dog breeds, guidelines in taking care of dogs, nutritional details on the specific breed, methods of dog grooming, tips, and everything in between.

Dog toys may be given as gifts as well. Like children, dogs are fond of playing. In fact, quite a number of breeds are recognized for their playfulness — some are born ball chasers.

Obviously, in giving toys as dog gifts, you must be careful not to get a toy that could potentially harm the pet. It is wise that you choose those toys that are primarily made of vinyl or latex materials.

Also, avoid those that can be torn in smaller pieces, as they may stick in the dog's throat. One toy you can get is cheap tube of balls, but they must be large enough that they won't fit into the animal's mouth. Or it can be an old sack, or better yet, the sneakers that he likes to chew.

As these examples show, you need not always buy a gift made specifically for dogs. But if you choose to, there are many dog websites that can provide you with a good selection of products. Furthermore, you can also buy from a local pet shop.

Moreover, if you cannot choose a dog gift yourself you have the option of giving the dog owner a gift certificate. This is an ideal way of giving a gift, because in this way you are giving the owner the chance to decide on the gift he thinks would be best for his pet.
