Why do you need to have burning desire? by ajay pats

Burning desire to be or do something gives us staying power—a reason to get up every morning or to pick ourselves up and start in again after a disappointment. When you want a thing deeply, earnestly and intensely, this feeling of desire reinforces your will and arouses in you the determination to work for the desired object. When you have a distinct purpose in view, your work becomes of absorbing interest. You bend your best powers to it; you give it concentrated attention; you think of little else than the realization of this purpose; your will is stimulated into unusual activity, and as a consequence you do your work with an increasing sense of power. Happiness can be defined, in part at least, as the fruit of the desire and ability to sacrifice what we want now for what we want eventually.

Behind every desire is a deeper desire. Behind the deepest of desires, you'll find the true identity of the person you are.

If you follow only the desires on the surface, without ever looking beneath them, you'll likely come up empty. For knowing why is a key part of accomplishment. If your desires are ever to be realized, you must question them. Know that beneath each and every desire is a more profound, more fundamental purpose.

Perhaps you are a slave to your desires, or perhaps you are shocked by your desires, and maybe you're even fearful of them. Have you ever considered stepping back and really examining them? They all exist for a reason. Knowing and following those reasons can lead you to an undeniable sense of real and lasting fulfillment.

Behind your desires you'll find something even more compelling — purpose. The more often you bring that purpose to the surface, the more successfully your life will proceed

Do You Have A Burning Desire Or Calling?

When you think about work do you think in terms of "burning desire" or "calling?" What is a burning desire to do this one thing you believe you were meant to do. What is a calling? Do you feel inside of you that there is a place that just is telling you that this is the way to walk?

This is your purpose. Then you are blessed for many this never happens. I think to have a burning desire is to steadfastly move in a certain direction not knowing many times where you are going to end up but knowing this is the path you should take. The more other's pooh and pah your desires the more resolute you become to travel your path.

What a marvelous blessing this is to be called, it does not have to be to greatness or fame. It may be a really humble job, or to volunteer, go to the peace corps. But it is the place you know you want to go and that it is right for you. You hear within you this voice urging you on.

You feel comfortable about following that voice. You know it is right.

I think it possible to have more than one calling in life. Some think you came into this world with one purpose. My experience has been that when I was younger having a job that paid the bills was perfectly alright. As long as I could pay the bills and have some nice things in life I was modestly happy.

Then came my first calling. I heard that small voice inside of me say what are you good at. I thought talking to people, listening, accepting people where they are. So my burning desire became being a counselor.

Why do you need to have burning desire?

This took going back to school at a late age in life. It took lots of starts and stops until I could believe it could happen. However, I became a counselor and was very happy in this position in life for twenty or more years. I felt I had found my purpose. Then I had another calling it was to be a writer and a publisher.

I am in the middle of following that calling now. I am a publisher and a writer. I write everyday. I publish daily, and I earn my living this way now. Why do I say I am right in the middle of that calling because each day the calling becomes more of a burning desire. I have not come to the end of this journey by any means. As I travel this path

I feel that I am helping others so I find purpose in doing this calling. But I know there is more. I can bring more of myself to my writing. I can bring more of myself by improving my ezine. I say to my Higher Power how can I serve? He replies how can I serve you.
