Write Possibilities

by: Shery Ma Belle Arrieta-Russ

We writers are a powerful lot. We control time. We dictate actions. We control destinies.

We can make two completely opposite people fall in love with each other, and we can create family feuds that can last for centuries.

We can make our heroine travel back in time to rescue her soulmate, and we can give the most villainous person the punishment she deserves.

We can take our characters to the most exotic places and give them their own adventures.

Simply put, we writers can create our own possibilities. In our world, nothing is impossible.

Try creating your own possibilities using the given prompts below.

There are 4 givens: theme, setting, character and key object. Randomly pick 1 from each and use these to start off your piece.

Themes: deception, irony, love lost, infidelity, rejection

Characters: chemist, divorced woman, doctor, teacher, singer

Key object: yellow bag, pen, knife, shoe, fuse box

Settings: space colony, gym, park, lab, retirement home

Here are a few examples using the above prompts:

Write Possibilities

Write a story about love lost, with a doctor as the main character and a shoe as the key object. Set your story in a park.

Write a story about infidelity, with a chemist as the main character and a pen as the key object. Set your story in a gym.

Write a story about deception, with a singer as the main character and a yellow bag as the key object. Set your story in a space colony.

Write a story about rejection, with a divorced woman as the main character, and a knife as the key object. Set your story in a retirement home.

Write a story about irony, with a teacher as the main character and a fuse box as the key object. Set your story in a lab.

Mix and match the themes, characters, key objects and settings. You can come up with more than 30 possibilities just using the ones already given.

Write stories... write your possibilities!

I Want Success! What Does That Mean To You? by Maureen Oliver

Ok, you say you want success, right? What does that mean? What is it you want?

Defining exactly what you want is the first step to manifesting it in your life.

If you could become anything you wanted, or succeed at anything you wanted in life, what would it be?

This first step is not a time to be "sensible." Ask yourself, "If money, relationships, time, etc. were not an issue, what would I be doing?"

Don't just talk to yourself in your head...write it down!

Write the question down on a sheet of paper, then just let your mind go wild with all the possibilities you've dreamed of for yourself over the years.

Write Possibilities

Don't worry about HOW these possibilities may come to be. Just write until you get a sense that you're onto something.

Nothing comes to mind? Jot down how you're feeling. Start off by writing, "I don't know what to write," "I need more coffee," "I really wish someone would just tell me what I want," whatever, just get your pen moving!

Your subconscious will kick in and start letting you know what it is you REALLY do want.

If you're anything like me, once I read over what I've written that little inner critic of mine gets to going and asks me stuff like, "Are you nuts? How are YOU ever going to accomplish that?" or "What makes you think YOU have what it takes?"

She can be a tad nasty at times, that little critic of mine.

Whenever your inner critic tries to tear down your efforts of becoming more of who you truly are, remember the words of Marianne Williamson as spoken by Nelson Mandela in his inaugural speech, "Your playing small does not serve the world...Who are YOU not to be great?"
