Writing The Perfect Wedding Speech Or Wedding Toast

By "Amy K. Spade"

If you're not feeling creative, there are a lot of ways to come up with a great speech or toast, so don't feel like you're under too much pressure.

Yet.

When stealing is good

Before we go into advice on speeches, the best thing that you can do is to get started on it early. Although these techniques and tips will work in the last few weeks leading up to the wedding, you really need to practice to make it look good.

Back to the advice, you don't have to write your speech in order to give one. You can search the Internet for other people's speeches and selectively borrow from them. Although some English scholars and copyright authors would squabble over plagiarism—you're not using this to make money, so you should be fine. If you fear that someone is going to arrest you, then quote the whole speech, giving the true author's name.

What's good about looking through other speeches is that you may just end up personalizing them anyways and coming up with your own ideas. That's how you write a good speech.

Getting ideas

A lot of writing speeches and toasts is from listening to other ones. Talk to the person—who-you-are-toasting's friends and family to see if there are any stories that would make a good toast. You'd be surprised at some of the things that you can find out. Of course, the really embarrassing ones should be saved for bachelor or bachelorette parties.

You may also want to find a poem that relates to them and read that aloud. Poems are always good emotional material. Try to find ones that speak of married love, rather than the newness of love. This will demonstrate your faith in their new marriage, rather than concentrating on the courtship.

And don't feel that you have to be stuck in finding something that's overly emotional. You can find something funny and have the whole reception hall laughing. Humor is tricky though because it can go south in a blink of an eye. Keep it clean, and you're usually fine.

The key to a great wedding toast or speech is the honesty with which you deliver it. A lot of times, it isn't the words that are moving, but the emotion that drives the toast or the speech. Be yourself and be true to the couple, and you're sure to be appreciated.

As the best man, you are an integral part of the wedding process. It was up to you to throw the perfect bachelor party. On the day of the wedding, you not only made sure the groom was looking sharp, but also made sure he got to his wedding on time with his bride's ring. Now, as you're sitting to the groom's left at the reception, you stand and say, "I would like to propose a toast." Although you've done all your duties perfectly up to this point, the wedding toast determines how you will be remembered by everyone in attendance. The last thing you want is to look into the crowd at hundreds of blank stares as you stumble over your words. Not to worry, by following some simple tips and guidelines, you'll have an instant wedding toast that will impress the bride and groom and leave your audience with tears in their eyes.

The ideal wedding speech should be between two and four minutes. Normally, in addition to the best man's wedding toast, the father of the bride, the groom, and the maid of honor should all be prepared to give a wedding speech. The father of the bride speech is should be given first. It consists of a congratulations to the groom for becoming part of the family, and wishes of good luck to the bride and groom. The groom speaks next, taking time to thank his family and friends for coming to the wedding and bringing gifts. The best man's speech follows the groom's wedding speech. The best man's speech should be a funny speech, which is why its so memorable to the audience. Finally, the maid of honor's speech is the a quick, concise wedding speech that signals its time to get back to dancing at the reception.

If you've read this far and still feel lost or overwhelmed, here are two words for you: don't be. You don't have to be a world renowned writer to write a memorable wedding speech. If you don't know where to start, InstantWeddingToasts.com has the answer for you. They provide over hundred wedding speech templates for immediate download. All you need to do is add your personal information about the bride and groom into the wedding speech template, and before you know it, you have a memorable instant wedding toast.
