Your Country Needs You

Your Country Needs You by malcolm james pugh

your country needs you.

Victorian is thought old hat,
Way past its pomp and prime,
A throwback to a world of austere,
A world of toil and grime,
Yet they had mail five times a day,
As fact and not idle boast,
You could write you would be late for tea,
From a beach on the south coast,
And your household would be forewarned,
If annoyed at your irksome ways,
Now you get home before the letter,
Because it takes up to three days,
Trains of course were frightful,
And ran on dirty smelly coal,
And steamed and snarled and snorted,
Whilst performing their passenger role,
But few indeed were ever cancelled,
And fewer still were ever late,
It takes modern disorganisation,
To confine us to that fate,
Automobiles were chic and noisy,
And top speeds always drew gasps,
But thankfully the contemporary cameras,
Werent good enough for speed traps,
This was an age that knew not losing,
Where everything could be achieved,
Where anything was possible,

Your Country Needs You

As long as you really believed,
Where police actually patrolled,
Where schools actually taught learning,
Where roads were actually navigable,
And everyone was always burning,
To be a part of Great Britain,
To have pride in where they belonged,
To read the countrys history,
And to sing the countrys songs,
Now our schools turn out illiterates,

You enter hospitals only if you dare,
Venture outdoors mainly in daylight,
And return late via very high fares,
Where nothing concrete is achieved,
Nothing difficult is undertaken
And statistics and illusion are,
Rolled out to blind a nation,
Whatever happened to the Great,
Whatever happened to the Britain,
All we have now is the state,
And all the lies that are written.
The only time we are acknowledged,
Is when its again a voting year,
When all is vividly promised, now,
Yet was ignored for all those years,
Yet maybe the election wont happen,
And we might after all survive,
As ninety per cent are rigged postal votes,
And they might not ever arrive,
Or at very best arrive late,
Carried on trains still double parked,
Policed by mere paper statistics,
And all piled up high in the dark,
Running on rails that might crack,
Or on roads that can often crumble,
Here comes the mass voting truck,
Yes, I can just hear its rumble,
But the drivers now in A and E,
And thence to wards and bugs,
And no one is sitting in the cab,
And no one can hear its chugs,
Like a nation that could do anything,
But now quietly quivers in a corner,
Which could once move mountains,

Your Country Needs You

But now just needs a mourner,
Who still has a good sound engine,
But poor bosses and engineers,
Where once there was pure power,
There now exists just abject fear,
Fear of the wrongly spoken word,
In case it should offend or annoy,
Fear of paying vast compensation
To anyone you might employ,
Fear of going out and doing something,
In case it should sadly turn out poor,
Just toe the line and pass the buck,
Whenever not absolutely sure,
Its time we really educated properly,
And reinstalled the Victorian drive,

When anything was possible,
And great ideas and thoughts were alive,
Promoted by those right at the top,
Not stifled from within by stealth,
Give us back our will to win,
Give us back this countys wealth,
Not the fantasy figures drawn,
Nor the illusion we are all fine,
Just the riches that, we matter,
And that this land is yours and mine,
That what we say makes a difference,
And what we do really gives us a role,
Like it was just yesterday,
Before officialdom took control,
Before long we will only know,
What they would have us hear,
And hope will lie down to die,
To be replaced by repressive fear,
So before we are disenfranchised,
And legislation chains our hands,
Before a suffocating grey blanket,
Is rolled out over our land,
Pause to think independently,
And see exactly what is really there,
And truly hear all the mounting lies,
And choose freedom over Blair.

What Is Country Music Anyway?

By Sintilia Miecevole

When many people think of country music, they think of sad songs about lost loves, broken down trucks and runaway dogs. In their minds, they are hearing all of these woes sung in the traditional twangy country accents of the south. However, these perceptions of country music are far from where this style of music has evolved. Today, country music is one of the most popular genres of music, normally outsold only by rock and pop genres.

Created in the late 19th century, country music has under gone many changes over the years. There are now many sub-genres to this type of music, with some of the sub-genres being commonly played on top 40 radio stations.

To understand country music, it is helpful to know about the instruments commonly associated with it. In country music, one of the most common instruments used is the fiddle (or violin). Some of these instruments can be expensive, but most are relatively inexpensive and are very easily transports since they tare light in weight and not overly large. When country music first `hit the scene', the fiddle was practically the only instrument used as accompaniment. However, as the country music style became more popular, the addition of other accompanying instruments became normal. The banjo became popular in some country music pieces in the mid 1800s, while the guitar did not break into the country music scene until the early 1900s. Electric guitars did not become a regular instrument in country music until much later in the 50s. Other various instruments used in country music are the piano (introduced in the 1930s) and the drums (used since the 1960s). Rarely used, but distinctive sounding instruments are used in certain country songs: the accordion, the harmonica, and the washboards.

Country music has roots in several different styles of music. Its beginnings started with the settlers that came from Europe. During that time, many couldn't read or write, so songs were created to pass history down from one generation to the next. Although country ballads have changed a great deal, going from the original songs about objective, though gruesome, events to more personal, subjective ballads without all the gore.

Today, the sound of country music can sometimes be very similar to other genres of pop and rock. Some country musicians, like Shania Twain, have many songs playing on stations that aren't considered "country". There are also musicians, like Sheryl Crow, who are considered pop/rock, but have songs popular on country stations.
